The Candidates for the Governorship—Prospects of the Campaign.

NASHVILLE, Saturday, July 31.

The candidates for the Governorship closed their appointments here to-day. The friends of Governor SENTER serenaded him last night, and elicited a short speech. General STOKES' friends their mounting escorted him to the Capitol with much enthusiasm.

The debate was opened by Governor SENTER, who introduced nothing new. General STOKES spoke with much vigor to a crowd largely composed of negroes, who were apparently with him. They applauded him warmly. After speaking he was serenaded by his supporters.

The nomination of a Conservative ticket here, composed of the supporters of SEYMOUR and BLAIR, has chilled the ardor of the Senter Republicans. It is believed that a majority of them will support STOKES.

The State Journal this afternoon publishes resolutions denouncing the registration and calling upon all Republicans to support STOKES.

Fires in Concord, N. H.—Loss About $40,000.

CONCORD, N. H., Sunday, Aug. 1.

About 12 o'clock last night a fire broke out in the book and stationery store of E. C. EASTMAN & CO., on Main-street, and rapidly spread to several adjoining wooden buildings, totally destroying five stores, occupied by the following persons: JAMES HAZELTON, dealer in dry goods and millinery; E. C. EASTMAN & CO., dealers in books and stationery; Mrs. M. N. SMITH, milliner; ROBINSON & TILTON, dealers in pictures and picture-frames; Miss TAGGART, dealer in confectionery; E. N. SHEPARD, variety store; GEORGE H. BATCHELDER, bootmaker; JAMES DAVIS, tailor; PRESCOTT BROTHERS, dealers in piano-stools; A. H. WIGGIN, power press. A bootmaker employed by G. H. BATCHELDER, named PAYSON MANN, was burned to death. His remains were found at 9 o'clock this morning. He leaves a wife and several children. Rumford Block was considerably damaged. T. W. & J. H. STEWART, tailors, and CHURCHILL & KILBURN, dry goods, removed their stock from it in a damaged condition. The loss on stock and buildings will probably amount to $40,000. The insurance is not known at the present time. The fire was probably incendiary. The stable of N. B. WADLEIGH and the barn of T. E. LANE, of Meredith village, were also destroyed by fire this morning. Mr. WADLEIGH lost three horses, valued at $1,000, on which there is no insurance. Mr. LANE's loss was $1,000. He was insured.

Several employes of the arsenal have been arrested on suspicion.

About 3 o'clock this morning a private watchman on Chestnut-street, between Eighth and Ninth, was beaten by a party of roughs, so that his life is despaired of.

MCCHESLAN, exhumed the body of ELLEN CALVERT, the girl who is alleged to have committed suicide on the 5th of June last by drowning, for the purpose of holding an inquest, as ordered by the citizens, who are greatly excited over the affair. Powers of the Governor of Louisiana—Decisions of the Supreme Court.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Saturday, July 31.

The Supreme Court of the State, sitting at Monroe, La., has rendered two decisions adverse to the power to remove officers appointed to State and other offices, which has been freely exercised by Governor WARMOUTH. In the case of the Mayor of Jefferson City the Court decided that no vacancy existed, and the Governor had no power to appoint. In the case of the Parish Judge removed by Governor WARMOUTH on the ground that the incumbent had not filed an eligibility oath with the Secretary of State, and because of his alleged disfranchisement under the Fourteenth Amendment, the Court decides that the act of the Governor in removing the Judge was without authority, the section of the act conferring the power of removal being unconstitutional; that Judges must be removed in the manner pointed out by the Constitution, and their eligibility must be determined judicially. The Court orders that the Judge removed by the Governor retain his office.

WASHINGTON.

Politics in Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia—Kentucky Prospects of Reelection—The Maximum Reconstruction Question—Revenue Decisions.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Aug. 1.

Ex-Supervisor NOAH, of Tennessee, who has arrived here, brings some additional news about the canvass in that State, and gives some interesting particulars relative to the respective attitudes of the two contesting parties. Mr. NOAH is of opinion that SENTER will be elected by from twenty to forty thousand majority, and says that although the Legislature will be Democratic or Conservative, it must not be inferred that the State is wholly lost to Republicanism. According to him, the Federal office-holders were almost unanimous in their support of SENTER until Mr. BOUTWELL's letter was published, which they regard as a sort of threat coercing them to vote for STOKES. It is said that they are somewhat indignant at this action of Mr. BOUTWELL, holding that they should have been allowed to decide for themselves between two avowed Republicans. The fight for the Senatorship will be quite lively, and at this date it is impossible to more than guess at the result. Mr. NOAH thinks a Republican will be elected, and that ANDREW JOHNSON has no chance whatever. He will be opposed by such men as NEAL S. BROWN, EMERSON ETHERIDGE, who is certain to be elected to the State Senate, will also be a prominent candidate, but the Republicans will hold the balance of power. EDMOND COOPER, who was ad interim Secretary of the Treasury under JOHNSON, will also be elected to the Senate, but he will not support his former patron. Mr. JOHNSON is very anxious to come back to Congress for very obvious reasons, but the opposition to him will prove too strong. The Old Line Whigs and the Democrats can never agree, and in the discussion between them the Republicans will stand a good chance of being able to elect their candidate. It may not be generally known that SENTER is the son of the Mr. SENTER who was formerly a member of Congress from East Tennessee, an Old Line Whig and a violent opponent of the pro-slavery State Constitution of 1835. SENTER himself is very popular, and was one of the electors at large of the State at the Chicago Convention, having voted there for GRANT and COLFAX. It is also stated that previous to the nomination, STOKES was asked to withdraw, and was offered the Senatorship on that condition, but that he declined, and this was mainly instrumental in bringing about the present disorganization. It is charged against him that during the present canvass he has declared himself opposed to extending the suffrage in East Tennessee, while in the midland counties he avows himself in favor of enfranchising all who ask for it. In regard to the future of the State, Mr. NOAH says that when the noise and confusion of the present election are at an end, the Old Line Whigs, who cannot go with the Democrats, will of necessity fall into the Republican ranks, and a liberal Republican Administration can hold the entire State.

ALABAMA POLITICS.

In Alabama the Republicans expect to elect five out of the six Congressmen.

GEORGIA POLITICS.

The Administration has determined to use all the means at its disposal if necessary to enforce the laws in the turbulent districts in Georgia, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has refused to accept the resignation of Assessor HATGOOD, and written to him that he will be protected from all damage by General TERRY, who is ready to increase, if necessary, the existing military force in the riotous district.

REVENUE DECISIONS.

The Internal Revenue Department has given several important decisions within the last few days. It has been decided that smoking tobacco manufactured from cigar chips, or navy or plug chips, is liable to a tax of 32 per cent per pound. It has also been decided that when a life estate in lands is extended by actual purchase by a tenant in remainder for an adequate and valuable consideration, the tax shall be assessed only upon the difference between such consideration and the value of the land. When, however, it is extended without any valuable consideration, the tax should be on the entire value of the property.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sunday, Aug 1.

MISSISSIPPI POLITICS.

A prominent Conservative Republican from Mississippi, who had an interview with the President on Thursday in regard to political affairs in that State, informed the President that the only desire of the Conservative Republicans was neutrality on the part of the Administration in the approaching election. The President is reported as replying that he wished for the success of the party which would in good faith carry out the Reconstruction acts, ratify the Fifteenth Article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and give protection to life and property in Mississippi. He wanted to know whether the former enemies of the Government were acting in good faith in their present professions of loyalty, and said that this would soon be ascertained in part by the action of the Conservative Republicans in Virginia. If they were acting in good faith, he would be glad to have not only the intelligence and influence of that State, but of the South generally, in support of his administration. The President inquired of what time the Conservative Republicans would nominate their candidates, and to whom informed that it would probably be about the 1st of September, he replied that he would see what kind of a ticket they would put in the field, and his action would be influenced more or less by subsequent events and the course of affairs in the South. He added that he desired to see the payment of the public debt secured, and the integrity and honor of the nation rendered indelible, and when this was accomplished he would be satisfied.

EXCHANGES AND PURCHASES OF BONDS.

The books at the office of the Comptroller of the Currency show that the amount of twenty bonds exchanged for five-twenties, under the recent decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, has reached $8,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury has instructed the Assistant Treasurer at New-York to purchase $6,000,000 of five-twenties a week during the month of August, the first purchase to be made Wednesday, Aug. 4. These purchases are in addition to the purchase for the sinking fund of $1,000,000 of bonds on alternate weeks.

TAX ON BONDS IN EUROPE.

Several prominent members of Congress recently in Washington have expressed themselves in favor of collecting the income tax on Government bonds held in Europe, to be deducted on presentation of the coupons of the bonds at the Treasury. They assert that it would be just to the holders here who now pay the tax, while foreigners have thus far escaped it. A bill has already been prepared for this purpose, and will be introduced immediately on meeting next session.

SUSPENSION FROM OFFICE.

The President has suspended from office ——STEWART, United States Attorney for the Northern District of Mississippi, but not for political reasons.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The public debt statement, to be published to-morrow, will show a further reduction of about $7,500,000.

The prescription by the physician called for aqua cinnamon.

A Circus in a Storm—Several Persons Injured.

From the Steubenville (Ohio) Herald, July 29.

The storm which visited this city last night was one of unprecedented fury, although no serious damage was sustained. Hail fell with the torrents of rain, and the wind blew such a hurricane that fears were entertained that much damage would be done the fruit. The storm came from the southwest, and struck the river above the city, where it spent its fury along the stream. About 9 o'clock, with the swiftness of a tornado, it swept over Wellsville, blowing down trees and doing considerable damage to the fruit. Noyer's Circus, exhibiting at the time, suffered considerable damage. The wind tore the canvass to shreds, blew out the lights and produced a scene of the utmost consternation. Women and children screamed, horses snorted and the audience rushed panic-stricken from the inclosure. WILLIE COOK, the favorite bare-back rider, was in the ring at the time, and had his arm broken by a fall from a frightened animal. A lady in the audience on one of the upper seats was thrown to the ground, breaking her shoulder blade. A number of other persons were more or less injured. The circus company went back to Pittsburg this morning for repairs. The old canvass was so badly torn as to be utterly worthless.

NEW-YORK ARCHITECTURE.

How Our Mansions and Tenement-Houses are Built.

Palaces of the Last Generation the Hovels of To-day.

Cost of House—Rates of Rents—The French Apartment Plan.

It is marvelous to contemplate the architectural developments of this great Metropolis which are advancing more and more toward the goal of taste that characterize a high state of civilization. This fact, however, must be taken into consideration, that the number of affluent people is vastly increasing, and the wealth of a reputed Crœsus of forty years ago, would hardly be deemed as more than a moderate income nowadays, and therefore residences of a more palatial character are in constant demand. Be it our millionaire of to-day builds an elegant substantial mansion, and after a few years discovers he is out of the pale of the élite, he will find a number of rising people who keep on the outskirts of the upper ten thousand, ready and willing to give him a fair and remunerative price for his dwelling. This is one of the reasons why we are increasing in architectural excellence and builders are erecting more substantial dwellings than they have within the last twenty years, when flimsy structures that would disgrace the nomads of an Indian village were put up and called residences. If, therefore, a better price can be obtained, after serving its owner's purpose, for the good old-fashioned house, where more money went into the masonry than on gingerbread furniture and gilded nick-nacks, why attempt again to raise such structures? Even people who have, as GOLDSMITH says, "just stepped into title and large fortunes," must at times get tired of meretricious glitter and desire to live in houses where the repairs in a few years will amount at least to something less than half the cost price. There is no excuse for not building good houses, for it is astonishing how the demand for houses in this City and vicinity still continues. We are assured by competent real estate agents that if 1,000 good houses on the French style could have been built within the month of April, they could all be rented in ten days' time after being made habitable. Thus we see that New-York, great as she is, is, after all, a mere infant compared with what she shall be when she begins to attain to something like her inevitable destiny. She is a hive that always swarms. When the war came, every one predicted that the grass would grow on the streets of the Metropolis. The loss of the Southern trade would, it was supposed, deprive her of her chief support. But the event proved that this City prospered amazingly all through the war, and that rents kept going up constantly, owing to the presence of population. The croakers also said that peace would speedily depopulate the overgrown city, and thus force prices down; but with peace came a greater rush of population than ever, and prices went still higher. The fact is, its imperial destiny, as the central city of the world, the great exchange mart for three continents, will always make New-York crowded, no matter how many houses are built. The time is not far distant when all the City below Twenty-third-street will be one vast mass of warehouses. Population will be driven off the lower portion of the island by the pressure of wholesale trade, we mean the upper tendom, of course, as in a previous article we gave it as a speculation that the Battery and the First Ward were rapidly filling up with tenement-houses. While this transition process is going on rents will continue to be enormous. The only hope for cheap houses is in the increase of railroad facilities to get out of the City, and the cheapening of fares, so as to put suburban houses within reach of the people of moderate means. The high rents have one curious social effect. It is in compelling almost every one but the affluent, who must live on the island, and who want a whole house, to keep boarders. There must be 10,000 so-called private houses in this City which are really boarding-houses. This state of things creates competition for boarders, and the result is that board is very cheap in this City, compared, that is, with rents. Notwithstanding all this encouragement to put up good buildings on this island, it would seem as if some of the narrow-minded blockheads of builders wanted to wreak their misanthropic vengeance on the public by putting up cheap brown-stone nuisances of one uniform pattern, only relieved by a sort of architectural delirium tremens, where variegated bricks make up a kind of mosaic front, such as adorns some of our churches, the Corn Exchange and the National Academy. The interiors are on a par with the exteriors, and within our recollection buildings in this City have tumbled down from roof to cellar without a warning, killing and maiming those within and in the vicinity. Look what scores crumble to atoms at the first breath of a fire; the long list of martyrs of the Fire Department is sufficient memorial. To rectify all this we must use more seasoned lumber, and capitalists had much better have the work done by days' labor than by contract system, which bears the same resemblance that a first-class tailor's work does to the slop-manufactured of Chatham-street. Time will come when reformation in building will be as much a necessity as the economizing of room, for which our architects have so high a reputation, as all the modern improvements and comforts can now be found even in the smallest houses. Let us, however, give the following hint to capitalists for the purpose of inducing some improvement of the land left us by inactate commerce for dwellings. We want steam roads to utilize completely the land contiguous to Central Park, but as these take years to build, why do not our large capitalists make the most of the land below Fifty-ninth-street? It is well known that there is surface enough to house three millions of people comfortably—nay, sumptuously—on that part of the island which lies below the lower end of Central Park. Not only so, but, at the same time, accommodations could be afforded for ten times the amount of wholesale and retail business now transacted. The land is not utilized. Look at the Eighth and Ninth Wards, most of which is within a goodshot of the costliest property on the island, yet which is to-day cumbered with wretched two-story tenements, unfit for decent human beings to live in, and now wholly useless for purposes of commerce. If it were possible for a huge corporation to buy up those two wards just as they stand, and improve them as they could be improved, the money invested would increase tenfold in ten years. As it is at present, with our property laws, to buy up whole wards, the next best thing would be to get sections of wards or streets. What a splendid speculation it would be, for instance, for some Company to buy the whole length of Hudson and Varick streets, with the streets running between. This section could soon be made to contain some of the choicest property in the City. But let us return to our subject.

REHABILITATION.

One of the curious features about New-York is the constant changes which are going on in different parts of the City. As one time a location is pleasant and even fashionable, and in a few years, presto! change—it has become degraded and almost uninhabitable by certain classes. Twenty-five years ago the élite of New-York lived in the lower end of Greenwich-street and near the Battery; now that locality has been given over to lager-beer saloons and sailors' boarding-houses. Less than twenty years since the neighborhood of St. John's Park was full of charming residences, but look at it now—the noble Park itself is a large freight-house, and the surrounding tenement-houses and saloons. Washington Parade Ground, which has so long resisted innovation, is doomed, and in less than two years Fifth-avenue will be extended through it. The same process of innovation has commenced in the Second-avenue, which at one time promised to be the great fashionable avenue in the City. Nor is this all. When once steam roads are built up to Westchester County we may expect a marked change in Fifth-avenue and Murray Hill. The crème de la crème of our fashionables who live there will find new homes on the upper end of this island, especially on the northwest side, while the lower end of Westchester County will be given over to charming residences for our wealthier citizens. We confidently predict that in fifteen years Murray Hill will be mainly devoted to the keeping of boarding-houses. But why should not this rehabilitation of the waste places of the Metropolis go on scientifically and according to rule, rather than fitfully and accidentally as now? As we have already observed, large companies should be organized to buy intrinsically valuable but now neglected parts of the city, and make those localities what they should be. See what enormous dividends could be made by a company that could buy all the streets between Broadway and Varick and replace the most of the present houses by stores and residences worthy of the City. We have no Emperor here to rebuild New-York as Paris was rebuilt and beautified, and this work must be done, if done at all, by a series of great corporations. Here is a chance for some capitalists to take the lead in this really public-spirited and philanthropic as well as lucrative enterprise.

LUXURY IN ARCHITECTURE.

Nothing denotes more greatly a nation's advancement in civilization than the ornate and improved style of its architecture, and the erection of palatial private residences. In the first particular we are unfortunately too imitative a people, as the long rows of buildings to be found everywhere too plainly attest by their wearisome uniformity and a sterility of ornament, that the exigencies of increased population gave them existence. Time is, however, making material changes, as the possessors of mammoth fortunes having long invested in property for the handsome percentage it returned, are now commencing to gratify their tastes, irrespective of such pecuniary considerations. Mr. A. T. STEWART has led the prospective parties into new fields of domestic architecture, by the erection of a costly private residence of a somewhat different style from the conventional brown-stone houses, to dwell out of which we have long considered to be utterly incompatible with true gentility. Mr. ASTOR is coming to his support, and is now putting up three private dwellings, which are to cost the handsome sum of $150,000 each. We also hear of several more millionaires who are loosening their purse-strings and devoting surplus funds in beautifying the City. This is as it should be, for is it high time that our nomad people be permanently located. Even our wealthiest families are too much given to change of homes, and consequently to inhabit houses where they feel they take up a mere temporary residence. The delightful associations that linger around the "happy homes of England" are entirely foreign to this City, and those many comforts and adornments of art, which can only possibly be found in homes long in the possession of the same family, are very rare except in New-England, for the transition state of the features of the city, and our destructive system of frequent moving often compels an entire change of furniture. This disposition for building substantial, handsome homes marks a new epoch, and though the absence of laws of entail and primogeniture may eventually cause the sale of such homesteads, by the necessity of partition, still there is a very convenient and popular way of keeping a mansion for some time in the family, by leaving it to the grand-children. There is little danger yet of the following aphorism of Dr. JOHNSON becoming applicable to this City: "He that has built for use till age is supplied, must begin to build for vanity; and extend his plan to the utmost power of human performance, that he may not be soon reduced to form another wish." Let vanity have its fling, we are too practical a people to permit it to ruin us as it has done the ambitious Venetians, whose marble palaces, though involving the owner's ruin, have yet made that charming city the architectural wonder of the world.

COST OF BUILDING.

The following is a table of the cost of erecting houses in this city. The items in the erection of one of our first-class houses in the avenues in a fashionable quarter may be thus enumerated:

Corner lot, (average price)	$20,000
Brown-stone house:
Masonry work	$18,000
Carpentering	16,000
Plumbing	2,000
Marble mantels	1,000
Tiles for hall, &c	1,000
Furnace	1,000
Architect's charges	1,000—40,000
Total for house and lot	$75,000

The front of a house like this in brown stone or Philadelphia brick, costs about $9,000, but in marble, of which very few private dwellings are made, $16,000, while Collabaugh brick would only be about $2,000. The average price paid for first-class dwellings throughout the City is $60,000. A good tenement of six stories costs about $30,000, and the ordinary dwellings of this class from $15,000 to $18,000.

THE TENEMENT HOUSES

on the East Side are a class of property with which one would like to have as little to do as possible, yet a glance at their present position as regards rent may not be uninteresting. The general average of their monthly rental during the past few years is ascertained, from a careful inquiry, to be about as follows:

Rooms, with back room	1864. $12	1867. $20	1869. $20
First floor, front	17	20	22
First floor, back	13	14	17
Second floor, front	15	16	18
Second floor, back	12	13	15

And so in proportion, the top rooms on the sixth floor fetching from $7 to $8 a month, both front and back. It appears, however, from all we can learn, that these prices can no longer be maintained, and the landlords of tenement property will have to recede a point or two.

NUMBER OF TENEMENT-HOUSES.

It is an indisputable fact that over one-half of the population of our City live in tenement-houses, and we see on every side, and at every turn of every street, the multitudinous tenement-house, blockading every avenue and byway of our great and growing City. There are generally from two to four families on a floor, averaging from 80 to 100 persons under the same roof, and in some cases one roof shelters as many as 300 to 500. Probably two-thirds of this class of our population inhabit the Tenth, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Seventeenth and Eighteenth Wards, where scarcely any other dwellings are seen than rows upon rows of large tenement-houses, reaching almost into the clouds, and peopled all with the "home and sinew" of the country.

The suburbs, environs and district of New-York contain a population of about 2,400,000 people, half of whom are compelled to live on an annual income not exceeding from $1,000 to $1,200, and one-fourth on yearly earnings below $1,000. There are no less than 100,000 mechanics of all branches in New-York proper, whose average wages do not exceed $20 per week. These, with their families, comprise a population of from 200,000 to 300,000 souls, being among the most thrifty, industrious and respectable class of our inhabitants. A special census shows the following results:

Number of tenement-houses	12,487
Population proper	79,281
Cellar population	15,000

Particular investigation—a point of most vital interest—was made in reference to the number of cubic feet of air allowed the respective inmates. The facts elicited upon this point were summed up as follows:

No. of Cubic Feet.	Houses.	Population.
From 200 to 400	3,000	102,000
From 400 to 600	3,500	79,751
From 600 to 800	1,400	48,942
From 800 to 700	1,100	31,752
From 700 to 800	700	22,597
From 800 to 1,000	1,300	32,000

There is, however, a change coming over the tenement-houses, as a very large portion of the parties who heretofore have lived only in hired houses, but who have now risen to the status of real-estate owners, are commencing to reside in Brooklyn on the cheap lots, where a number of moderately-priced houses have recently been erected. The putting into operation of the South Side Railroad on Long Island, and the laying out of towns in New-Jersey, is attracting a number of the poorer classes. Upon some of the lots sold during the Winter and early Spring modest but comfortable tenements have been erected, and the month of May found them occupied by whilom tenants in New-York, but now owners of these suburban residences.

FRENCH HOUSES FOR NEW-YORK.

The present exigencies of living and housekeeping in New-York are such that thousands of families of moderate incomes find it impossible to live here in the comfort and elegance to which, from their position and education, they have been accustomed, and they are therefore obliged to seek country homes, depriving themselves of the pleasures and attractions of society, and of all public amusements, rather than live here cramped, cabined and confined in boarding-houses and hotels. To such families, and to all who wish to live in comfort without spending a fortune in house rent, furniture and servants, the idea of a house built on the French apartment plan must offer a cheerful prospect of ease and economy without stint or deprivation. To begin such an arrangement in New-York, it will be necessary to have the first houses constructed in a good and fashionable locality, to have them handsomely built and decorated in order to attract the well-to-do class of people. Young married people would be partionlarly glad to find such houses in the City. Here, a young man who has perhaps not a very large business income may find the delights of home. In Paris the young people always live "high up," generally in the same house of which the young lady's family occupy the first floor; so that although the wife has a house and home to herself, she is not removed from the advice and assistance of her family. To the owner of a New-York house on the French plan the accumulated rents of eight or ten families would, unquestionably, pay a handsome percentage on his investment. On the French plan the good apartments, large enough to hold a large family, with fine drawing-rooms and every convenience of space and handsome arrangements, should not cost over $3,000 a year, and the smaller ones, equally handsome and well appointed, might be profitably leased at from $1,000 or less to $1,500, according to position. Of the economy of room there can be no doubt, since at least twice as large a number of families and three or four times as many individuals could be accommodated on a given piece of ground as at present. The economy of house rent would also be indisputable, when one pays only for such rooms as one occupies. These houses being constructed to accommodate six or eight families, are divided into apartments of various sizes, so that a family of two or three persons can have a handsome house without paying for a single unoccupied room. And yet a family of nine persons can find plenty of room in the "ground apartments" with less expense than in one of our tw

ON THE COAST OF LONG ISLAND.

Good English—Sea Bathing—Sand—Clam Fritters—Old Families—Some Historical and Geological Investigations—The Plain—The Railways—South Side and North Side, &c., &c., &c.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

SOUTH SIDE, LONG ISLAND, Wednesday, July 28, 1869.

LONG ISLAND ENGLISH.

Mr. RICHARD GRANT WHITE, three or four years ago, in one of his "Yankee" letters to the London Spectator, diverged from the usual path of his correspondence to describe a trip he had made down Long Island. He found many things to admire—the simplicity and good-breeding of the people, their skill in domestic cookery; but what particularly struck him was the purity of their spoken English. Mr. WHITE, we all know, has an ear quick to catch the melody of good English, for was it not he who discovered the "vocal velvet" of the fair British blondes? The Long Islanders, therefore, have reason to plume themselves over praise from such an authority. For myself, however, I must confess I have never been able to discover any very broad separation between the English of Long Island and that of other fairly intelligent Middle State communities. It is far better, it is true, than the patois of New-Jersey, but it is not very different from the speech of regions where New-England influence has been modified by that of the slow and solid Dutchman.

A NEW-ENGLAND COLONY.

Some of the most energetic and moulding forces of the island came from New-England. Very early in the history of the country a Puritan colony had settled here. What brought them, in the way of natural attractments, it is hard to imagine, unless it was fish. Fish, it is known, were at the foundation of many a Puritan colony. Either the colonists had an instinctive appreciation of the necessity of phosphorus to feed their active brains, or they found that the sea was more fruitful than the stubborn soil upon which they builded their new homes. Where they landed on Long Island they could not hope to make much out of the ground, for that was little more than a sand-heap upon which they pitched their tents and erected their church and school. But fish there were in abundance, and swelling surf, and a kindlier climate than that of Cape Ann or Plymouth. Moreover, with energy and patience, they were upon able to chop away the scrub forest, and lay out farms, from which they could raise corn and wheat enough to make an extra course along with their fish and clams and oysters.

"OLD FAMILIES" OF LONG ISLAND.

At the south side of Long Island you meet many an old family directly descended from these early Puritan settlers. Indeed, I know of no other part of the country where there are to be found more perfect genealogies. At the eastern end of the island are landholders who can show you deeds of their land dating back more than a century. These families have clung to their ancestral soil, have frequently intermarried, and have lived a quiet and unambitious life. The sons have sometimes gone to sea, but have come back sooner or later to settle down in the old house. The War of the Revolution and of 1812 carried off some, for they have always been a patriotic people. The rebellion absorbed more, the graves of many of these filling the quiet burying-grounds, and their martial equipments, laid aside, hang conspicuous in the old houses. But the communities have been quite fixed in character, and apparently well content with their narrow island home. As the result of intermarriages there are some names which you constantly meet all along the South Side and to a less extent on the North Side. It will be strange, if you travel far, if you do not encounter a Howell or a Post or a Halsey or a Terry, and several other names I could mention. You see them constantly on signboards of shops and on the doors of taverns. If you are on the lookout for a Summer boarding place, you cannot fail to come across one or the other even of the four names I have given, borne by the masters or mistresses of farm-houses and hotels. And, if my own experience is of any value, you will in nine cases out of ten find it altogether safe to trust yourself to the hospitality of a landlord bearing any one of these patronymics.

BOARDING-HOUSE KEEPING THEIR SPECIALTY.

For the keeping of sea-side boarding-houses is the specialty of the respectable South Side Long Islander. He prepares for the duty; he is not above it; he is simply equal to it; and you may be sure he has had long experience in the performance of it. He is a first-rate judge of clams, and an expert in cooking them. Fish he knows as well as to leave little worth the learning. So altogether the South Side Long Islander is a very important factor in our American civilization. If he doesn't always speak Mr. WHITE's pure English, he at least is quite sure to be courteous and self-respecting.

A HALF-MADE ISLAND.

Nature, herself, did not originally do much for Long Island, except to barely create it. Indeed, it may be called an infant island, which was discovered and peopled before it had been fairly weaned. It is plainly of comparatively recent birth, and therefore one is unreasonable who expects too much of it. There is a "backbone," as it is called, running through it, one hundred miles of length, but it is not a very strong one, and the land on either side is the deposit of the sea, thrown up during the most recent periods of geological history. I do not pretend to be a HUGH MILLER or a Dr. NEWBERRY, but I have eyes, and I have seen other lands, and I see that Long Island is different from most of them. Without taking the trouble to go about with spade and hammer and pick-axe, anybody can readily see that this long neighbor of ours is, as I have said, one of the infant children of our prolific mother Nature. With the exception of the "back bone" it is one vast sand bank. Rocks are almost unknown. I remember the stage drivers pointing out one or two smooth boulders, too evidently washed by the sea waves to need a geologist's attestation of the fact, and speaking of them as the curiosities of the road. And I have ridden on that road and a dozen others for many miles, and have never encountered a stone much larger than my fist, and not many of those.

THE PLAIN.

No one who has never ridden through the "Plain," as it is called, has any idea of what monotonous and desolate riding is. This plain is a vast stretch of flat country, occupying a large share of the surface of the island. It is simply a heap of sand. The horses struggle through and just about as white as that of a sea-beach. The wheels of the stages sink into it for several inches, and if it be hot weather, the dogs yell with the pain of their burned feet as they run over it. The roads are, to the eye uninstructed by long experience, indistinguishable one from another. They are always sandy, always lined on either side by an even growth of scrub trees, and one looks in vain for houses or other landmarks in miles of travel over them. It is bewildering to the stranger to come to some of the cross-roads. A dozen different roads will cross one another, every one showing the same white sand and the same fringe of scrub oaks. But the inhabitants drive on with perfect confidence, and always succeed in arriving at their destinations somehow or other, though they take a good while in doing it. A good sample drive for the uninitiated would be from say Riverhead to Quogue. It is a distance of eight or ten miles. When you have traveled it you have got a new experience of nature. At the outskirts of the plain you will see fields of corn and wheat growing in sand white and clean as the sand of the sea-beach whither you are going. Now and again your nose will be greeted by the perfume of decaying fish laid on as manure. But between those patches of cultivated land your horses must wearily work along through finely triturated sand, with no more evidences of human life and civilization about them than there were in the pre-Adamite world. Indeed the drive always suggests to me the probable appearance of a half-done world. Deer grass, whortleberries, scrub oak, and other vegetation, that witnesses the poorest quality of soil, grow here, but nothing else. Now I do not mean to run down the Plain; I should not choose it as a place of residence, though I have no doubt that the Chinese or aliens will some day make fertile fields of all these miles of underbrush; yet I enjoy driving through it, especially with the prospect ahead of a magnificent beach and the rolling surf of the broad Atlantic, and a hearty, well-cooked supper at one of the farm-house hotels that line the shore.

BAD COMMUNICATIONS.

The misfortune of Long Island has been its means of communication. The Long Island Railway runs through the centre of the island—its stations the merest hamlets after passing Jamaica, and until you come to Riverhead, and to get anywhere it has always been necessary to take a stage drive through this plain. The South Side Road, recently laid, runs down the island about fifty miles, though it ought to be extended fifty miles further to have any revolutionary effect, and has been of great service.

But there is needed also, and equally, a North Side Road, which necessity has been only partly met by a branch of the Long Island Railway to Northport. To reach Setauket and Port Jefferson, for instance, a stage drive of from two to three hours, beside railway travel, is required, and yet these towns are only about fifty miles from New-York. It is now proposed to run a steamer from the latter port across the Sound to Bridgeport, to connect with the New-Haven Railway, which road promises to encourage the enterprise by low fares. As it is at present these towns must suffer materially in their business interests by the miserable state of the communications. It is probably this difficulty of getting anywhere which makes the Long Islanders a peculiar people. Except as a tourist, eager for new experiences, I should myself go without a good deal rather than drive frequently through these miles of sandy roads.

A VIRGIN COUNTRY.

But we are not looking at Long Island as economists. We are simply people who propose to utilize it for our own amusement. We do not care to have our quiet quarters disturbed by a great irruption of New-Yorkers in search of sea-bathing, so we selfishly bless Mr. OLIVER CHARLICK and the Long Island Railway, and enjoy our pleasant sea-side life and the moderate prices which numerous and swift railways would speedily elevate. Here, within fifty miles of New-York, deer still roam. It is true, there are not many of them, for they have been hunted almost out of existence; but, if the present Game law is observed, as it seems to be, certainly with reference to deer, and Mr. CHARLICK retains his supremacy over Long Island, the day is not far distant when we shall not need to travel way up to the Adirondacks for our deer-stalking, but shall get it in some sort in this flat country at our doors. I fear, however, to give the gay hunter any false hopes. The probabilities all are that Long Island is to be regenerated. Mr. STEWART has commenced at Hempstead, and his success will send the tide of utilitarian civilization far down the island, and the deer, game laws or no game laws, will be crowded out of his familiar pasturing grounds.

THE SOUTH SIDE.

The New-Yorker who sets good sea-bathing will find it in abundance and at numerous places on the South Side. Coney Island we all know. It is at the extreme western end of Long Island, and separated from it by only a narrow strip of water. Next comes Rockaway Beach, also much frequented by New-Yorkers who cannot or think they cannot find time to go further for their plunge into the salt water. Then come Jones Beach and Oak Beach; then the Great South Bay, and of it that narrow ribbon of sand called Fire Island. On the bay is Islip. Both of these seaside places are favorite resorts. The Great South Bay is admirably adapted for sailing and yachting and it offers many attractions to the sportsman. Islip has several fine hotels, and the name of STRELLENWERP is famous among hosts. Fire Island, for sea-bathing, is almost unequaled. You are fairly anchored out at sea, and you breathe the fresh salt air in all its purity. Here the hotels are always crowded, and crowded with very pleasant people to meet, and the beach is gay with bathers. The South Side Road has brought the island close to our doors, and, as a consequence, it must hereafter be more frequented than ever. At the eastern end of the Great South Bay is Bellport, a town of a charming maritime appearance. Here a son of the Islip STRELLENWERP keeps an excellent hotel, and the white painted house that line the principal streets suggest the homes of retired mariners. Here and there a figure-head of some retired ship ornaments the front yard of some retired seaman. Clam shells take the place of pebbles, and in the quiet bay rest numberless boats and yachts. A little further on, on the bay of the same name, is Moriches, where the TERRYS keep pleasant houses, and the inhabitants generally, as all along this coast of Long Island, seem to have an hereditary aptitude for the management of Summer boarders and for the making of clam fritters. The specialty of Long Island, be it known, is clam fritters—and a very good specialty it is. After Moriches we come to Westhampton, Quogue, Ketchabonack and Quogue clustered together, and all of them, especially the last, old-time resorts, which we who are along in life remember as frequented in the days of our youth. Here nearly every other person you meet is named either HOWELL or HALSEY, and the names are synonymous with good fare. A neck of land takes you to the outer ocean beach, which is an admirable one for bathing, while back of the house is a wooded country with trees of really fine growth, and roads which have loam enough on them to make them pleasant for driving. Takings all things together, just hereabouts is one of the finest sea-side places in the country. The hotels—they are rather large farm-houses than hotels—are removed about half a mile or so from the beach, and are shaded. This is an advantage which those can appreciate who have tired of the glare and monotony of a barren stretch of sandy beach, but it is partly counterbalanced by the greater distance to the surf, though the boarding-house keepers are always ready to convey their guests thither. Beyond are Southampton and Easthampton, and the latter is especially frequented. It is well up toward the eastern extremity of the island, and has a fine beach and boarding-houses, marked by the same characteristics as those which distinguish South Side boarding-houses generally. The trouble about these latter places—that is, those from Westhampton eastward—is the difficulty of access. The route is to Riverhead by Long Island Railway—seventy-five miles—thence by stage eight or ten miles across the Plain, through sand and sand, and by scrub oaks, to the welcome lights of the houses. But the traveler, when he reaches his journey's end, if he is fond of the sea, is not apt to be discontent, but soon forgets the toils of the journey.

ON THE NORTH SIDE.

commencing at the eastern end, is Orient Point, a very desirable and frequented resort, and then follows Greenport, which offers fine facilities for boating, yachting and bathing. Then you pass a line of towns on the Sound, none of which offer much room for hotels or many inducements to visitors, until you come to Port Jefferson, which is not a remarkably attractive place, though the bay is a beautiful one, indeed the finest on the North Side. Near by is Setauket, where ROBERT BOWNE has been wont to spend August, and also young Mr. TOUSEY, of the American News Company, besides other well-known New-Yorkers. It is a pleasant town. Then you come to Oyster Bay, Huntington, Glen Cove, and so pass into the East River, and are home again at New-York. VIATOR.

A Negro Preacher Shot in the Pulpit.

From the Nashville (Tenn.) Press & Times, July 1.

A gentleman who passed through Cartage Sunday last, learned while there that a negro preacher named TOM MCCLELLAND, while holding a meeting in a church on Defeated Creek, some six miles from Cartage, last Saturday night, was brutally murdered. He was praying with a number of mourners at the "altar," or "anxious seat," when four men in disguise rushed in upon him and shot him dead. It is reported that two other negroes were wounded. There is no clue as yet to the assassins. TOM was much esteemed as a benign old character. MCCLELLAND, for a year past, had been making speeches for universal suffrage.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

—The American Woman's Home. By CATHARINE E. BEECHER and HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. 12mo. (New-York: J. B. FORD & Co.) Here we have another installment of popular instruction from that family of "brains" which old Dr. LYMAN BEECHER was father of. How it happens that the instincts of the BEECHERS lead them to irradiate the common things of every-day life with their peculiar genius, instead of busying themselves to find new topics and strange fields of intellectual labor, we do not know. Fortunately, that is the fact, and in this gifted family the world owes much, in the fact that they know how to discover new meanings in old and backnayed themes; to make the homely things of life show their bright sides; to simplify many of the complicated problems of humanity by the rule of a strong common sense which ignores traditions and studies nature, direct; to sympathize with both the Rye and grass of the world and to apply to both the living principles of Christian philosophy; and finally, to pour the light of a poetic and happy temperament over all. This is the work they delight in; and in the solid and handsome volume above mentioned, we find a peculiarly apt illustration of their style of doing things.

The book might be called a housekeeper's manual of first principles. The table of contents discloses a remarkable variety of topics, from the planning and building of a house, its proper ventilation, furnishing and decoration, (in modes which cleverly combine the charms of beauty with the convenience of economy,) to the best ways of living, so as to secure comfort and true happiness. The care of health, in all its moods and tenses, even from infancy to old age; healthful food and drinks, with significant hints for good cooking; personal cleanliness and clothing; the regulation of the household as to rising, good manners, good temper, habits of order, giving in charity, the management of young children, home amusements and social duties; sewing, fires and lights; the care of rooms, yards, gardens, plants, flowers, fruit and domestic animals; earth and water closets; ventilation and warming, with popularly scientific discussions of the whys and wherefores of all the advice given, based on physiology and the laws of matter, good sense, good taste and the laws of mind. These are some of the large round of themes discussed, and, we must say, made admirably clear and intelligible.

Young married women, and for the matter of that, old married women, and men too, if they will but read, may find many helps to pleasant and comfortable living in this volume. It is handsomely printed, profusely illustrated, and compactly and handsomely bound.

—The Play School Stories for Little Folks. By Aunt MATTIE. 32mo, 4 volumes, (Boston: GOULD & LINCOLN.) These two tiny volumes are full of very charming and instructive amusement for the little ones. They contain the story of a bright and sunny little girl who persuaded her "Aunt Mattie" into playing school with her from day to day, and with her clever sayings and comical doings must have made a very happy house. The fun for the children does not prevent many capital hints for their elders as to how active bodied and quick-minded little folks may have the way of early instruction made merry and joyous for them.

—The Dance of Modern Society. By WM. CLEAVER WILKINSON. (New-York: SHELDON & Co.) This brilliant little essay was originally published in the Eclectic Quarterly, and the large call for it has led to its release in the present neat and attractive form. Mr. WILKINSON handles his subject boldly, without coarseness; wittily, without flippancy; piously, without cant. He makes a very decided distinction between dancing, which he allows to be pleasant, healthful and harmless, when properly conducted—and the dance as it exists in modern society, which he insists is unwholesome, immoral and degrading. Whether his readers agree with him or not, they will admire the evident sincerity and vigor of his idea, and the terse, trenchant style in which he sets them forth.

—Illustrated Travels. A Record of Discovery, Geography and Adventure. Edited by H. W. BATES. (London: CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN; New-York: AUGUST BRENTANO.) This is one of those admirable publications for which the publishing house of CASSELL & Co. is justly celebrated. Cheap as it is, and within the reach of people of moderate means, it is splendidly illustrated with wood engravings after designs by DORE and other eminent artists, and is printed in large, clear type on firm white paper. It is coming out in numbers at the price of fifty cents a number, and when completed will make a very handsome as well as useful and interesting book.

—Count Bismarck. A Political Biography. By LUDWIG BAMBERGER. Translated from the German by CHARLESE LEE LEWES. (New-York: B. WESTERMANN & Co.) This is strictly a political biography, written by an ardent admirer of BISMARCK, and advocate of the Prussian policy of aggrandizement. It contains too much speculation on the theory of German progress and too little personal gossip to please the generality of American readers; but those who wish to make the recent movements in Germany a political study, will find much valuable and interesting information in these pages. The translation is only passable.

—Murray's Adventures in the Adirondacks. Tourists' edition. (Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & Co.) Those who intend visiting the Adirondacks this Summer will thank the publishers for the neat and convenient edition of Mr. MURRAY's amusing book, which, though very unlike most guide books, will be found a very practical and useful one. This edition is furnished with excellent maps, and is especially designed for use among the mountains.

—Good Society. A Complete Manual of Manners. By the Right Honorable the Countess of . (London and New-York: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS.) Written by a Countess, this little book must be accepted, we suppose, as an authoritative manual on the great subject whereof it treats. The author assumes as much in her preface. She says: "Herewith the author aspires to meet a social requirement of long standing, namely, a work of genuine authority on all points of etiquette, ceremonial and manners. Many books professing to treat of these subjects have from time to time been written, published, circulated; but these books have abounded in errors, indicated an inferior standard of taste, and been written by incompetent persons." She then goes on to say, very truly, that a standard work on manners must necessarily proceed from the pen of one who moves in the best circles, and although such persons are, for the most part, "ignorant of the wants of those who occupy a lower position in the social scale," it is obvious that instruction in the observances of fashionable life come from them with greater weight of authority. Cherishing these sentiments the Countess has written a very entertaining and doubtless useful book, which touches on every variety of subject relating to fashionable life. It is published in very handsome style.

English Views on Naval Sick Rank.

The British Medical Journal and the Lancet comment as follows on the attempt of the American naval surgeons to obtain proper recognition in the Navy of the United States.

The Medical Journal says: "The surgeons of the United States Navy are dissatisfied, and we think justly so, with the treatment accorded them by their Government, for at the conclusion of the civil war they were left unrewarded for their exertions, (which were acknowledged to be creditable while promotion and appointments were heaped on the Executive class. * * * FARRAGUT, like NELSON, and other worthies of the British Navy, fully appreciates the services of the surgeons to position and emoluments, but inferior minds dread loss of dignity to themselves by the elevation of civilians. The surgeons ask for inspector grades, similar to those existing in European navies, especially as the rank of Admiral has been introduced into the navy of the United States, and they further ask that rank shall be substantive, and accompanied by privileges (always excepting command.) It is a remarkable circumstance that the navy suffers much more than the army from a martinet spirit which the executive officers term 'aristocracy,' we should rather say pseudo aristocratic."

The Lancet remarks that "substantive rank, apart from command, is an idea difficult to be grasped by the Executive mind which confounds the entirely distinct principles of military authority and social privileges, making the second dependent on the first. This false principle, which prevails not in the war services of Great Britain and the United States, is certainly in 19-20ths of the cases the chief obstacle to substantial improvements in the status of the medical profession throughout Europe since the days of the great APOLLOS. Perhaps, after sixty years of discussion, our profession, at some second, may have triumphed over it, but it has raised its head again—more in the navy than in the army—fostered by the head of the ruling class, and it is remarkable that in aristocratic England and republican America, the executives of the navy are more tenacious of that point than those of the army. These or highest stations, like our SEWARD and their FARRAGUT, are the officers who have strongly supported our claims.

THE ECLIPSE OF 1806.

The following interesting extract are from a paper by J. FENIMORE COOPER, describing the great eclipse of 1806, to be published for the first time in Putnam's Magazine for September. The near approach of another total eclipse of the sun gives additional interest to the article:

"When I left the Court-house, a timbre, yet lowlily, numbered sidering and shed over the country. A great change had taken place. The trees on the distant heights had lost their verdure and their airy characters, they were calling the outlines of dark pictures graven upon an unfamiliar sky. The lake bore an altered aspect, very unusual. All living creatures seemed thrown into a state of agitation. The birds were fluttering to and fro, in great excitement; they seemed to entertain that this was not the gradual approach of evening, and were undecided in their movements. Even the dogs, honest creatures, became uneasy and drew closer to their masters. The poor, joyous look of interest and curiosity, which earlier in the morning had expressed almost every countenance, was now changed to an expression of wonder or anxiety or thoughtfulness, according to the individual character.

Every house now gave up its tenants. As the light failed more and more with every passing second, the children came flocking about their mothers in terror. The women themselves were looking about uneasily for their husbands. The American wife is more apt than any other to sympathize with affectionate confidence to the stronger arm for support. The men were very generally silent and grave. Many a laborer left his employment to be near his wife and children, as the dimness and darkness increased.

I once more took my position beside my father and my mother, before the gates of our own grounds. The sun lay a little obliquely to the south and east, in the most favorable position possible for observation. I remember to have examined, in vain, the whole dusky canopy in search of a single cloud. It was one of those entirely unclouded days, long next to America than in Europe. The steadily waning light, the gradual approach of darkness became the more impressive as we observed this absolutely transparent state of the heavens. The birds, which a quarter of an hour earlier had been fluttering about in great agitation, seemed now convinced that night was at hand. Swallows were dimly seen dropping into the chimneys, the martins returned to their little boxes, the pigeons flew home to their dove-cots, and through the open door of a small barn we saw the fowls going to roost.

The usual flood of sunlight had now become so much weakened that we could look upward long and steadily without the least pain. The sun appeared like a young moon of three or four days old, though, of course, with a larger and more brilliant crescent. Looking westward a moment, a spark appeared to glitter before my eye. For a second I believed it to be an optical delusion, but in another instant I saw it plainly to be a star. Out after another they came into view more rapidly than in the evening twilights, until perhaps fifty stars appeared to us in a broad, dark zone in the heavens, crowning the pines on the western mountain. This wonderful vision of the stars during the noonlit hours of day filled the spirit with singular sensations. I recollect suddenly one of my pupils exclaimed aloud, 'The moon!' Quicker than thought my eyes turned eastward again, and there floated the moon, distinctly apparent, to a degree that was almost fearful. The spherical form, the character, the dignity, the calmness of the heavens, all clearly revealed as it has never been beheld them before or since. It looked grand, dark, majestic, and mighty, as it thus proved its power to rob us entirely of the sun's rays. We are all but larger children. In daily life we judge of objects of their outward appearance. We are accustomed to think of the sun, and also of the moon, as sources of light, as ethereal, almost spiritual, in their essence. But the positive material nature of the moon was now revealed to our senses, with a force of conviction, a clearness of perception, that changed all our usual notions of connection with the planet. This was no interposition of vapor, no deceptive play of shadow; but a vast mass of obvious matter had interposed between the sun above us and the earth on which we stood. The passage of two ships at sea, sailing on opposite courses, is scarcely more obvious than this movement of one world before another. Darkness like that of an early night now fell upon the village.

My thoughts turned to the sea. A sailor at heart, already familiar with the face of the ocean, I seemed, in mental vision, to behold the grandeur of that vast natural phenomenon, a shadow falling suddenly upon the sea, during the brightest hour of the day. The play of light and shade upon the billows, always full of interest, must at that hour have been indeed sublime. And my fancy was busy with pictures of a chill-cooled schooner, and birds, and fish, gliding like winged spirits over the darkened waves.

I was recalled by a familiar and insignificant incident, the dull tramp of hoofs on the village bridge. A few cows, believing that night had overtaken them, were returning from feeding on the wild open pastures about the village. And no wonder the kindly creatures were deceived, the darkness was now much deeper than the twilight which usually turns their faces homeward; the dew was falling perceptibly, as much so as at any hour of the previous night, and the cool breeze was so great that the atmosphere must have fallen many degrees from the great heat of the morning. The lake, the hills and the buildings of the little town were swallowed up in the darkness. The absence of the usual lights in the dwellings rendered the obscurity still more impressive. All labor had ceased, and the hushed voices of the people only broke the absolute stillness by subdued whispering tones.

'Walk! The night-peer will!' whispered a friend near me; and at the same moment, as we listened in profound silence, we distinctly heard from the eastern bank of the river the wild, plaintive note of that solitary bird of night, slowly repeated at intervals. The song of the Summer birds, so full in June, had entirely ceased, for the last half hour. A bat came flitting about our heads. Many stars were now visible, though not in sufficient number to lighten the darkness. At one point only, in the far distant northern horizon, something of the brightness of dawn appeared to linger.

At 11:13 the moon stood revealed in its greatest distinctness—a vast black orb, so nearly unobscuring the sun that the face of the great luminary was entirely and absolutely darkened, though a corona of rays of light appeared beyond. The gloom of night was upon us. A breathless intensity of interest was felt by all. There would appear to be something instructive in the feeling with which man gazes at all phenomena in the heavens. The peaceful rainbow, the heavy clouds of a great storm, the vivid flash of electricity, the falling meteor, the beautiful lights of the northern heavens, defy the play of fancy—these never fail to fix the attention with something of a peculiar feeling, different in character from that with which we observe any spectacle on the earth. Connected with all grand movements in the skies there seemeth instinctive sense of majesty, of serious expectation, akin to awe, which may possibly be traced to the echoes of grand Christian prophecies, whispering to our spirits, and endowing the physical sight with some mysterious mental precidence. In looking back to that impressive hour, such notions seem to me the feelings of the youth making one of that family group, all apparently impressed with a sensation of the deepest awe, (speak with certainty. A clearer view than I had ever yet had of the majesty of the Almighty, accompanied with a humiliating, and, I trust, a profitable sense of my own utter insignificance. That movement of the moon, that sublime voyage of the worlds, often recurs to my imagination, and even at this distant day as distinctly, as majestically, and nearly as fearfully, as it was then beheld.

A group of silent, dusky forms stood near me; one emotion appeared to govern all. My father stood immovable, some fifteen feet from me, but I could not discern his features. Three minutes of darkness, all but absolutely opaque. The sun appeared strongly illuminated by the intensity of the shadow, and the flood of overpowering thought which filled the mind.

Thus far the sensation created by this majestic spectacle had been one of humiliation and awe. It seemed as if the great Author of the Universe had visibly and almost audibly walked his way in his wrath. But, appalling as the withdrawal of light had been, most glorious, most sublime, was its restoration! The excess of light above the moon became suddenly brighter, the heavens beyond were illuminated, the stars retired, and light began to play along the ridges of the distant mountains. And then a flood of grateful, cheering, consoling brightness fell into the valley, with a sweetness and a power indescribable to the mind unless the eye has actually beheld it. I can liken this sudden, joyous return of light, after the eclipse, to nothing but the resurrection of a dead world. It was certainly present to the change produced by the swift passage of the shadow of a very dark cloud, but it was the effect of this instantaneous transition, multiplied a score than a thousand fold. It seemed to speak directly to our spirits, with the assurance of gracious, Almighty protection and of that Divine love which has produced all the glorious combinations of matter for our enjoyment. It was not in the least like the gradual dawning of day, or the actual rising of the sun. There was no gradation in the change. It was sudden, astounding, like what the annihilation would teach us to expect of the advent of a heavenly vision. I know that philosophically I am wrong; but, to me, it seemed that the rays might actually be seen flowing through the darkness in torrents, till they had again illuminated the forest, the mountains, the valley, and the lake with their glowing, genial touch.

There was another grand movement, as the crescent of the sun reappeared, and the moon was actually seen steering her course through the void. Venus was still shining brilliantly.

The second passage of the moon lasted but a

THE ENGLISH HOUSE OF LORDS

What is a Peer?—Its Rights, Powers and Privileges—Life Peerages.

From the London Saturday Review.

What is the House of Lords? What is a Peer? To define a Peer is no easy task. It is easy say what particular persons are Peers at any given moment; it is easy to say what their peerlar privileges are by law or custom; but to say how the Peerage in its present shape came into being is a very much harder matter. Every one who has studied constitutional history, every one who has so much as read through HALLAM, must know that there is no greater puzzle than to say how, why, and when our present hereditary peerage grew up. As ever in English constitutional and social inquiries, we must go back to the very earliest times to find out the real cause. What is the House of Lords? It is simply the old Assembly of the people of England, the ancient Meeting of the Wise. There is no better instance of the way in which, in England above all countries, institutions change their forms, and spring to new life again in new shapes, but with the old spirit. For all practical purposes the House of Commons is the true modern representative of the ancient Witenagemot; but the House of Lords is the Witenagemot itself by actual personal succession. There is absolutely no break in the chain. Always, even in feeble times, the trouble is the direct outcrop. Kings, but even under Normans and Angevins some sort of national council never failed us. King WILLIAM assembled his Witan no less than King EDWARD, and both Henries did the same. No line can be drawn between the Council of the eleventh century and the Council of the nineteenth. And of course it is the House of Lords which bridges over the dark days between the two.

But the House of Lords is, and has been for six hundred years, an aristocratic body. The old Assembly, in theory at least, was democratically democratic. In theory, the assemblies like the key to the whole matter. Our great Councils became aristocratic in practice because they were so highly democratic in theory. What is a Peer? He is in truth simply an Englishman who has not lost, or who has regained, the ancient right of every free Anglian—the right of the Council of the nation in person. It has been often shown how such a right as this, except in a state of the very smallest size, a single town or a very small district, gradually destroys itself. The mass of those who have the right to attend cannot and do not attend; their rights lie dormant, and the assembly, which potentially becomes an oligarchy, simply because it is in theory so pure a democracy. But in such a case as this the greatest irregularity in the numbers and qualifications of those who do attend follows as a matter of course. Every attempt to define the constitution of our National Councils, either before or for a good while after the Norman Conquest, has always broken down. Ingenious men have puzzled themselves to find out what the qualification was, the real ground of their difficulty being that there was no qualification at all. Of course, there was a full and marked and powerful classes of men, the Earls for instance and the Bishops, always came as a matter of course. They were not likely to let their right drop, and the King could not well have got on without them. But beyond these he did what he pleased. Is there any principle, if there is any sort of principle, it is that the right of attendance depends on the King's summons. No principle was more natural, to grow up. Where the mass of those who had a theoretical right to attend never came, nothing was more obvious than that those who did come should be wanted for, nothing was more natural than that the right should gradually be held to be attached to the summons; that it should be held that no one had a right to come who was not summoned, that the King could summon whom he would, but that some classes of men had a right to be summoned. Such a theory as this seems to explain the utter irregularity of the constitution of the House of Lords even for some time after the House of Commons had grown up by its side. About the Earls and the Bishops there seemed to be no doubt at any time; besides them the King summons Abbots, but he does not always summon the same Abbots; he summons temporal men, but he does not always summon the same temporal men. The son may be summoned though the father was not, or the son may not be summoned though the father was. The man who is summoned to one Parliament is not always summoned to another. All this of course shows great irregularity—an irregularity which could only have existed in a transitional period. One theory, in short, had been given up, and no other theory was as yet fully established. The purely hereditary doctrine grew up in this matter by step by step, just as it grew up step by step with regard to kingship. But it would be hard to show that there was any more sense when the Crown lost the right of creating a peerage which need not be hereditary—that is, the right of summoning a man to Parliament without of necessity binding itself to summon his heirs forever.

Looked at in a purely historical way, it is hard to understand why peerages left the right of the Crown to create life peerages. It is plain that the Crown once had the right; it is by no means plain that the Crown ever gave up that right. The only doctrine on which the right can be attacked is the extreme democratic one. It might be said that the whole system of personal summons was a usurpation, and that every freeman had a right to come, summoned or not summoned. The only ground on which it can be held that the Crown is bound to summon the son because it has once summoned the father, is the ground that the Crown is bound to summon everybody, or rather that everybody has a right to come without being summoned at all. Of course the answer will be that such doctrines are inconsistent with the hereditary character of the House. But the rejoinder is obvious that the hereditary character has grown up by degrees and which is not fully established even now. It is something more modern than life peerages, and it never has wholly extinguished life peerages. An English Bishop is a life peer as Irish Representative Peers are, as far as the House of Lords is concerned, a life peer. An Irish Bishop or a Scotch Representative peer, sitting by rotation or by election in each Parliament, is something less than a life peer. Any merely hereditary privileges enjoyed by Scotch and Irish Peers who do not sit in the House of Lords are those which belong to all the Scotch and Irish Peers who do sit, just as much as the Bishops, peers of men who have seats in the House of Lords, but whose seats do not necessarily pass to their eldest sons.

Now we do not mean to say that what seems to us a sound historical argument is necessarily sound legal argument. Lawyers constantly find out that precedent is a good one and the other a bad one, while, in an historical point of view, one seems as good as the other. But we do not see why the argument should be evaded by the ground that the constitution of life peerages in the House of Lords would be the very last to take up. But the question, both as an historical and a legal one, has now become a matter of curiosity. By taking a bill to enable the Crown to do this or that, it implies that the Crown cannot legally do it at present. And the expediency is of course another question, into which we do not mean to enter. The hereditary character of the House of Lords is one of the things which have come about by accident, and, like other things which have come about by accident, it has its advantages. The great and a bad side. It is a constitutional anomaly, but it is an anomaly which has some incidental advantages. But it must be, and it may be, extended by somewhat stronger arguments than have been brought forward in the House of Lords that by the grant of life peerages. Only it is surprising to find Lord DERBY, who might take up even personally a higher position, taking up the ground of the mere pride of wealth. Lord MALMESBURY's great object seemed to be to show that if he were plain Mr. HARRIS, no one would think of asking for a peerage. It is a much more ridiculous thing to say that a life peer will occupy a lower position than an hereditary peer. He will surely occupy a much higher one. It is to be supposed that he will be appointed for merit of some kind or other; that he is himself the sort of man, as much as the hereditary peer's highest heir, is to be a distant descendant. In the debates in the House of Lords, those who come nearest to the nature of life peers do not seem to lag behind the others. Lord DERBY and Lord MALMESBURY will not deny that the display made by bishops, by law lords, and by other peers who [illegible] of their titles, has not been wholly contemptible. Lord DERBY, to be sure, did what he could to crowd the House of Lords with the ordinary peers that he could create—with men who were unknown beyond their own counties, and who are unknown beyond their own counties still. But these are just the men whom no one would make life peers; indeed if they are to be made peers at all, they had better be hereditary peers, as there is at least the chance of their sons improving. Still, after all, the peers of Lord DERBY and Mr. DISRAELI's creation have shown one merit. It is hard to remember the somewhat grotesque titles for which they have exchanged their hereditary or assumed surnames. And they have not, as hereditary legislators, done much to make us remember them. Let no one think we are blasphemous. We give them every credit. We might indeed have liked to hear from them some rational explanation of their own position. But they have had the good sense to hold their tongues; Lord MALMESBURY has not had the good sense to hold his.

THE M. AND L. RAILROAD DISASTER.

Still Further Details of the Calamity.

Condition of the Wounded Sufferers.

by a Passenger.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal, July 31.

Latest advices from the wounded lying at Clarksville (eight in all) are to the effect that they are getting along well. All of the wounded brought to this city are fast recovering. None of them are seriously hurt. The only lady in the rear sleeping car who escaped unharmed was Miss WHITAKER, of New-Orleans. As the train bearing the wounded to this city came by the road to me I beseiled by kind-hearted people at every station, who proffered their sympathy and any material aid that might be required by the unfortunate. Mr. DOLE and Mr. WATTS, of New-Orleans, behaved nobly in the trying hour, and, by their kindness, cheering and promoting the comfort of their fellow-passengers as long as they could be of the slightest service. Judge CABLE and his wife, of Algiers, opposite New-Orleans, were very badly injured. They are in good hands at Clarksville. A little child, whose mother had bundled it up in cushions, quilts and pillows, in order to save its life, if possible, was taken from the ruins as sound and lively as though nothing unusual had happened. Mr. FONTAINE, of Memphis, with his wife and three children, were on the train, and all escaped safely. Mr. CHATAINE, who was badly wounded, as was the colored nurse of her children. Mr. HAMILTON PIKE, son of General ALBERT PIKE, with his sisters, were on the train, but escaped with slight bruises, and received universal commendation, as did Mr. SAWYER, and young Mr. WOOD, of New-Orleans, for their heroic and energetic efforts to save and relieve the wounded. Great praise is awarded to MAT DOW, the conductor, for his coolness in the prompt discharge of his duty. Dr. MCCOMBS, from Bowling Green, accompanied the train which brought the injured to Louisville. Young Mr. MCCOLL, of New-Orleans, was tossed from his berth into that of a lady on the opposite side of the car. The lady sustained painful injuries from the shattered window glass, and Mr. MCCOLL was pretty badly gashed and bruised.

EXPRESS MESSENGER KILLED.

It was reported last night that Mr. DUGAN, the express messenger on the ill-fated train that went through the trestle-work bridge near Clarksville, had died of fatal injuries received. It was afterward reported that he was alive and doing well. A gentleman, a warm friend of DUGAN's, informed me that a dispatch from Clarksville states that DUGAN had died from his wounds, and also, that a metallic burial case had been sent for in which to place his remains.

STATEMENT BY A PASSENGER.

At Paris, Tenn., the Louisville bound train was on time, the conductor said, and most of the passengers, myself included, arranged for as comfortable a night's rest as circumstances would allow. While sleeping pretty soundly, I was suddenly awakened by the jerking, bumping, crashes, and almost immediately this was followed by a rattling noise similar to that made by drawing a stick quickly across a palisade fence. In a few seconds a terrible crash ensued, and nearly simultaneously with this, I found myself rap

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

The Recommendation in its Favor by the Committee of the Vermont Council of Censors.

The Committee of the Vermont Council of Censors, which has just reported in favor of so amending the State Constitution as to allow women to vote, are described as being all straight-forward, practical men—not sentimentalists, nor reformers, in the common acceptation of the term. They are substantial and prominent men in the State, and have all seen something of public life. All are by profession lawyers, and actively engaged in politics—one a Democrat and the other two Republicans. Their action has naturally taken the people of the State by surprise. Many think that some of them acquiesced in the report as a good method to bring the subject before the people.

The Committee, in their report, after quoting from the Declaration of Independence the assertions that "all men are created equal," and that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and also from the first clause of our own State Constitution, the statement that "all men are born equally free and independent, and have certain natural, inherent and inalienable rights, among which are the defending and enjoying life and liberty, acquiring, possessing and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety," proceed to say:

"We all believe these to be self-evident propositions, and that they apply to all mankind, man and woman. Suffrage is an expression of opinion by ballot. The qualifications are capacity to understand the effect of public measures and a desire for the public welfare. And it is the right of any one, man or woman, who possesses these qualifications, as much as it is the right of any other. But one-half of the people of our country are denied this right, and women has no vote. Yet she has all the qualifications, namely, the desire for the public welfare. She is taxed, she is governed. She pays taxes. Even in her case, a fair application of the principles of the Declaration of Independence and of our State Constitution, above quoted, give woman the ballot, and do not shut out from it one-half of the intelligence and more than one-half of the moral power of the people. Custom and prejudice alone stand in the way. There is no reason why woman should not be allowed to vote as well as man. Experience has shown no objection to woman suffrage that has ever been successfully met. We know no good reason why the most ignorant man should vote and the intelligent woman be refused. Our present political institutions were formed and adopted when men had their sphere of interests and pursuits out of doors, and women remained the humble slaves at home. The social change has been immense. Now woman sits by the side of man, is his companion and associate in his amusements, and in all his labors, studies, pursuits and hopes, and has overtaken the nineteenth century. And it is time that she should be his equal in law. The position of woman in regard to the common schools of the State is the most absurd and unjust that can be imagined. She must always be the chief instructor of the young in point of time and influence. She is their best teacher at home and in the school. And her share in this ever-expanding work is becoming greater every day. Woman as mother, sister, teacher, has an intelligence, a comprehension of the educational needs of our youth, and an interest in their development, far in advance of the other sex. She can organize, control and teach the most difficult school in the State; yet she has no vote in the selection of teachers, the building, arrangements and equipment of school-houses, neither in the method and extent of instruction. She can pay her share of the expenses of the schools, but she has no legal vote in their management. She can earn, she can have no vote in determining what shall be taught. She is the very corner-stone of institutions which she has no lawful vote in shaping. Suffrage alone can carry woman's equal right and privilege into the district school. And especially will it give us have her interest and public responsibility and cooperation—always better than direct influence—always more honest and efficient than a kitchen cabinet. This subject is one that promises to engross the thoughts of this generation; and it will be agitated till in the light of experience it meets the demand, and votes will not be questioned. This result is just as certain as it is that in the end the cause of truth ever triumphs. We believe that woman, married or unmarried, was made to be the companion of man and. Not his mere servant; that she has the same right to control her property that he has to control his; that she has the same right to aspire to any occupation, profession or position, the duties of which she is competent to discharge, that he has. A right is worth nothing without the power to protect it. The ballot alone can do this. When the black man of the South was made a freeman, his ballot was given him as the only sure mode of protecting his freedom and the equal rights freedom confers. And we should glory in seeing Vermont, first of all lands, accord to woman her equal rights before the law, and invest her with their only safeguard, the right of suffrage. After abolishing human slavery, the next great conquest of the United States over wrong and error, will be to take woman from the foot of man and place her by his side, invested with every right and privilege of her present "lord and master" that the law can confer. And in this it will benefit the highest interests. Whatever will elevate her will elevate him. That they rise or sink together all history shows."

They quote quite extensively the speeches of Hiram Ward Beecher and William Phillips, and refer the Council for views in which they say they concur, to the speech of John Stuart Mill in the British Parliament, May 20, 1867, and to the recent report of the Joint Special Committee on Women Suffrage to the Senate of Massachusetts, May 25, 1869.

A FATHER'S BRUTALITY.

From the New-Orleans Times, July 27.

Edward Hutchins was tried yesterday before the First District Court on a charge of assault and battery, committed on the evening of the 16th July. The evidence of Mr. A. S. Eaton showed that on Saturday evening, the 16th of July, at about 10 o'clock, he heard the two children of the accused screaming most terribly, with the falling of heavy blows, sounding as fleted with a dray whip. This continued for about fifteen minutes, when Mr. Lagan went over and through a two-inch wide crack, saw the accused beating his children, a boy of seven and a girl of five years, with a heavy whip with a hickory handle, and the boy was naked. Witness then saw a glare in the room as if something was lighted; heard the father say, "hold this," whereupon one of the children screamed terribly as if suffering intense pain. Saw a child holding a piece of burning paper in his hand, the father still holding the whip; saw the father examine the children; the boy had his voice burned fearfully, the thumb and index finger burned, as if boiled. The body of the boy was covered with cuts and stripes; one cut on the leg was about six inches long. The flesh was of a bluish color, bluish cuts. The girl was still more hurt, she having refused to hold the burning paper in her hand. Witness took them both to the residence of Judge Amelie, who also examined the children.

Mr. Rayson also testified to the burning of the boy's hand, and the ill-treatment. Several ladies and a colored servant were also examined. The hand of the boy was then unbandaged by District-Attorney Rogers, and exhibited to the jury. The burning marks have been terrible, as the two fingers showed horrible wounds.

The District-Attorney thought it not necessary to make any remarks, and submitted the case.

The accused, who had been under great excitement during the examination of the State witnesses, who were cross-examined by himself the having engaged no counsel without any effect on the jury, addressed the latter body with a few remarks protesting his innocence; that he merely corrected his children, and hoped the jury would extend him back to them whom he dearly loved. The jury rendered a verdict of "guilty," without leaving their seats. The prisoner, being informed by the Court that he would be sentenced on Friday, and could go until then on his bail, asked to be sentenced right off. Judge Amelie stated that this was an important case, that he must consult the statutes. He himself had seen the children; he at that time could not believe that a human being could inflict such brutal treatment on another human being, much less on his own offspring. The prisoner retired and took his children with him.

The Increasing Prosperity of the South.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, July 31.

The prospects ahead are bright for the South, and especially for New-Orleans. From all quarters come words of good cheer, and it seems almost certain that the sad earth will yield a plentiful harvest. Men everywhere throughout the South are looking hopefully into the future, and see in the teeming fields and prospective harvests salvation from the ominous clouds that have hung above them since the dawn of war swept from them all save their lands. With their own right arms, and strengthening sense of the state of affairs, politically, the world have disencumbered men less noble and less brave, they have achieved a triumph which reflects upon them more of glory that they gathered upon the fields made memorable by their feats of arms. In many cases where the negroes have proved unreliable, the women and their sons have performed all the manual labor, and have successfully established the fact that they are independent upon none but themselves. Generally, however, the negroes have evinced a disposition to work, and could they be removed from the mischievous influence of political demagogues, would soon be cheerful and contented in their new estate, satisfied with the substance of freedom, without desiring to join in that hopeless chase after the bonus fulsum of reality.

It is now believed that inside of three weeks the first bale of cotton will be received at this port, and from all accounts the shipments will probably increase from that time. Occasionally we hear a faint whisper of the worm, but no serious damage has yet occurred from the ravages of this enemy of the snowy king, and we have cause to indulge the hope that this year it will not come to leave desolation and ruin in its path. Corn gives promise of a fine yield, most of our planters having learned wisdom by their hard but thorough teacher, experience, have planted more than a sufficiency for home consumption, beside raising all the meat they will require. Thus the South is pursuing steadily and assuredly the path to prosperity in spite of the stumbling blocks that have been thrown in her way, and in the persevering industry of her people lies the true road to that prosperity which undoubtedly awaits us.

Death of a Brave Soldier.

David Wright, a native of Scotland, but long a resident of Ryegate, Vermont, died at that place on Wednesday. The St. Johnsbury Caledonian, says that he was six years in the British army when he was young. At the breaking out of the late war, and when nearly 80 years of age, he and his three sons enlisted as three years' men. At his wife's solicitation the Adjutant-General sent him his discharge on the eve of the battle of Mill Run. His aged wife urged him to go home and not risk his life, but the true patriot prevailed—"Yes, I can go now, but every shot tells on the enemy," and into the fight he went, coming out unscathed. Soon after he returned to his family, he took from the seat of war, made by his wagon, the seat contributed, this time, into the Third Vermont Regiment, where he continued until after the terrible campaign of 1864. In the Wilderness fight his son Henry was mortally wounded. At this battle he was attacked with acute inflammatory rheumatism, which made him nearly blind, yet he continued fighting his way down to Coal Harbor, where he became detached from his regiment, wandering blindly about for three days, until brought in by a New-York soldier. He was nearly famished, his sufferings intense, and in his blistered face and swollen eyes his comrades did not recognize him. From there he was sent to Bristol-hospital, Pennsylvania, for medical treatment, where he remained until August, 1864, when he was discharged and sent home, with his sight nothing improved. During his service he was in thirty-six battles. Since that time he has suffered very many extremely painful operations upon his eyes, but all in vain, and his suffering life closed the 27th of June.

A Saxon Account of the Battle of Koniggratz, or Sadowa.

In the new volume of the Report of the Saxon General Staff on the campaign of 1866 we find an account of the battle of Koniggratz. The strength of the allied troops is stated as having been: Austrians, 156,654 infantry, 21,324 cavalry and 712 pieces of cannon; Saxons, 12,345 infantry, 2,374 cavalry and 36 cannon. The Prussian army amounted altogether to 220,000 men, or about 6,000 men more than their antagonists. Though the report of the Saxon staff shows on the whole much more consideration for their guardians allies than might have been expected in some places it returns with many of the accusations of the official Austrian work. The account of the retreat from the battle-field of Koniggratz is well described. The following are a few passages: "To render the situation complete, orders had been given to close the gates of Koniggratz, while the trenches and outworks of the fortress were being filled with water. Embarrassed in a labyrinth of canals, and unacquainted with the localities, the troops could neither advance nor move in a lateral direction, while the pressure from behind put all thoughts of returning out of the question. A number of the wagons were overturned and fell into the water, one of them filled with wounded Saxon soldiers; several horsemen present to the close of the trenches, umbled in and perished, horse and man. In this desperate situation many attempted to leap over the palisades, and others, who tried to pass the trenches, which were every instant becoming deeper, and some even plunged into the Elbe, hoping to cross it. A good many were successful in their efforts, but a great number were drowned. Terror prevailed everywhere. The universal confusion reached its highest pitch when the Austrians, who had first arrived at the trenches of the fortress began to discharge their pieces, and in so doing not only wounded several soldiers, but for a moment spread a belief through the retreating ranks that the enemy's cavalry, having already reached the opposite bank of the Elbe, was firing on the left, or was even, perhaps, already in possession of it. In such a disheartening position it is not to be wondered at that the order which had hitherto been observed, and the cohesion of the troops previous could no longer be maintained, and that considerable losses in men ensued became inevitable. It must, however, be said to the credit of the troops, that, notwithstanding this temporary disorganization, when the gates of the fortress were at last opened at 11 o'clock at night, they at once began to form again in corps and columns; two days later, 6th July, their reorganization was nearly effected, and on the 7th July the divisions were all again assembled under their respective standards." The report closes the account of the retreat with the following description from the journal of a Saxon officer: "The Bohemian mountains we descended and into the plain toward Bosenitz, in clear results and excellent order, but the march was not to remain long unmolested. After passing the wood at Brockiez, we were joined by the Austrian columns of all weapons retreating in the same direction as ourselves, not without the order which we observed. There! hoom! there arose a thronging and pressing, at one time from the right, at another from the left, and sometimes from both sides simultaneously, which made it no easy matter to hold the men together, and rendered it almost impossible to advance with the broad front of the close column, so that we were constrained to forego all the advantages of this formation, and adopt the flank march instead. The situation grew worse with every step. The mass of fugitive Austrians continually increased, and the disorder of their ranks increased every minute more irretrievable. Here and there villages encumbered on the road, and the crowds crushed through the narrow streets, or made the best of their way through hedges and over gardens. Swarms of straggling Austrians filled every available space; discipline and command were forgotten, but still worse was behind. A loud and continued noise mingled with the report of cannon was suddenly heard, and a column of Austrian cavalry threw itself on us as it might have done on an enemy. The horsemen broke through the infantry without whom they never could carrying with them confusion and darkness, and when they could find no opening they made one by force. The fight became still wilder. We were tossed about in a sea of men, beasts, and vehicles, and expected every moment to sink in the animated surging tide and be trampled under foot. The thunder of the cannon at no great distance behind us reminded us continually that the enemy was close at our heels, and every instant we expected to see a shower of shells fall amidst this dense, devoted mass, and the Prussian cavalry follow up completion the work the deadly explosive missiles had begun. We had not utterly lost hope, but it was a terrible situation. At one instant our company was crushed or dragged into a long line, at another it was gathered in a broad, compact circle. Yet, by the firmness and fidelity of our men made them always obedient to the voice of the officers, and they continued to form a connected whole in the midst of the indescribable confusion and utter disorganization which prevailed all around." The report concludes with the following list of losses: Saxons—61 officers and 400 men killed; 18 officers and 1,409 men wounded; 2 officers and 97 men prisoners; together, 80 officers and 1,409 men. Austrians—204 officers, 5,122 men and 2,445 horses killed; 431 officers, 9,445 men and 720 horses wounded; 48 officers, 9,145 men and 2,140 horses missing; 683 officers, 21,661 men; 340 horses taken; together, 1,419 officers, 45,373 men and 6,046 horses. Prussians—106 officers and 1,935 men killed; 260 officers and 6,659 men wounded; 26 men missing; together, 366 officers, 8,618 men and 693 horses.

Velocipedes in France.

The art of velocipede driving has attained such importance in France that it has its organ, in the form of a remarkably well written illustrated paper, entitled the Velocipede Illustré. In this amusing little journal your velocipedists will find every possible light thrown on their art, and minute records of the last feats performed by their Gallic rivals. I extract for their benefit the following notes on two journeys accomplished by Mr. W. R. McCrinnell and a party of five friends. The object of their first expedition was Chantilly. Leaving the Boulevard Ste. Marie, by the Porte Maillot entrance gate of the Bois, they passed Levallois, Clichy, St. Ouen and reached St. Denis in thirty-five minutes. Having partaken of luncheon at that ancient town, they started at 12m by the route impériale, which runs from Paris to Chantilly, by way of Ecouen and Montlaix. The five travelers are unanimous in stating that nothing can be more execrable than the old imperial road. So rough with stones was it that when practicable they velocipedied along the adjoining fields, and sometimes on the pavement of footpaths. Falling these, Mr. McCrinnell and his friends, now that they had, following the example set by the miller in La Fontaine's fable, who put the ass into the cart and harnessed himself to it, descended from their bicycles and dragged them after them. In spite of all these adverse circumstances, the first velocipedists reached Chantilly at 4 P. M., having done their fifty miles in five hours. But more enjoyable was the trip from which the same party returned another night. Starting by the Champs Elysées and Neuilly, they reached Nanterre, and passed through the Forest of Rueil. Still they neared the native land of the roulette, and through the picturesque village and on to St. Germain. From the Court subsist—to which, in spite of its palace being now being converted into a museum of Roman and Gaulish antiquities, the spirit of Hennet de Goumeny, the last of the Maréchal La Vallière and of the royal Louis, and, at a later period, of the dying beam of our own discovered James, imparts historical interest—our travelers, passing by Chatenay, Bourevilly and Montesson, literally flew on to Mantes, in less time than four hours. The road, Mr. McCrinnell says, on mature authority, is well conducted with bicycle law, informs the Velocipede Illustré, in its speech as a brilliant metaphor, and the only difficulty experienced is to keep back the bicycle. He computes the energy de pedale required during the transit from Paris to Mantes as 21,000. That gentleman strongly recommends subjects in the art, after enjoying the luxury of the trip to Mantes, to take Fontainebleau as the object of their excursion, by Melun, Perts has a fine Cathedral, to Malesan Alter, and, so far, is not so even as could be desired. Thence by Villeneuve St. Georges and Montgeron to Tieureaint, the road, passing through the forest of Senart to Melun, is macadamized. From Melun to Fontainebleau it is paved; therefore, to avoid this inconvenience, velocipedists are advised to make a slight detour, and take the macadam, and Milly and Barbizon, to Fontainebleau.

Paris in Full Summer.

Paris Correspondence of the London Morning Post.

The aspect of the boulevards tells us that we are in full Summer. Outside the cafés and restaurants people are clustered together slowly sucking ices, or drinking German beer, which has become a favorite beverage with the Parisians since the period of the Universal Exhibition. Men sit with their hats off, and look fatigued and lazy; the waiters have all that air of languor and lassitude which possesses the hard-worked clerk when the gas is lit. The women trip by, provided with mak-lined parasols, in pretty toilets, all hair and no bonnet, and each high-heeled boots as neat sensations only were at Court and in drawing-rooms. But how prettily women dress this hot weather! So much picturesque variety! There is a dreamy, gauzy transparency about the bodices of many bright colors. Then the tunic-like drapery which covers the hips, and goes winding and tufting about a little behind the knees, is also mysterious as pory material, which gets into a pleasant interfaced difficulty, now down the back of the figure, reminding one of the "bustle" days. But, thank Heaven, these contours of the women are modestly by a combination of broad ribbon sashes (taking my word all one of the style of the boulevards to-day, and watching the pretty toilets (not always accompanied by pretty faces,) I began to meditate how it was that French ladies almost invariably dress with good taste, no matter how the fashion changes, I got into a conversation on the subject with a neighbor, who proved to be a lady's tailor—a most intelligent artist, highly refined in manner and language, a perfect gentleman. He told me that French ladies allow their modiste to do dress them as they think fit, but that the ladies of other lands, "Then," he added, "we have a natural feeling for color, as the Germans have for music; we at once see a discord, it shocks us. Sobriety of color is a great secret for outdoor dress. I have been in London. Some of your higher classes have moved in the same circle as my family, and when they get their toilets from M. W., who is as great as the greatest artist of the famed Venetian school for color, I wish that I could write M. W.'s biography. His influence on society is more despotic than that of any other man in society or modern history. Wave after wave of fashion sweeps, and in the whole world the woman world—assumes a new aspect. . . . Then again," continued my neighbor, "we have so many fashion books written with sound judgment; so many guides. Here, upon, he took from his pocket the Mode Illustrée. "There now, look at this! Suppose you wanted to know about summer dresses and robes. Hear read. You understand that I" interrupted my friend. How mean (and yet how often) we all do it! Aloud, "Yes, I thought I did." I now became partner, and thanked my friend, and left the copy, a little put down, as you always feel when you leave the presence of a superior mind. I walk on until I find myself in the gardens of the Tuileries. It is Sunday; a bright hot sunlight. The venerable chestnut trees in green bower-like all the walks and the gravel path, dusty, but bright, are full of the old avenues. Round about and everywhere you meet with the toddling and screaming beginning of the next generation. The trees are showing slightly but surely the yellow leaf, but how gay and beautifully bright are the flower beds of the Tuileries! Paris is a city to go to the Fantasias—to walk up to the palace windows, to watch the sparkling fountains, and learn Pagan history from the marble statues which intersperse the flower-beds. Here, in the cool shade, may be met with on Sunday (as now, very rarely, I have seen) some lady and gentleman who, with a prodigious amount of intrigue in all classes of Parisian society, but comparatively little love; I mean the love W—S— describes, "all sighs and tears," and "made of fantasy," and "all purity, all trial." As I walk home along the Rue de Rivoli I write, and wonder if next the library hands going to play in the public places. Strange or open Victoria carriages are going on slowly toward the Champs Elysées, and such a crowd of well-dressed citizens on the pathways.

A Close Fight With a Shark.

From the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard, July 27.

Persons who are in the habit of going into the water along the shore to bathe, should look out for sharks. Mr. Frank Taylor informs us that while Job Murray, a man named Banks and himself were bathing, a few days since, they discovered a shark in the water at a distance from them, which acted as if he would like a tussle with them. Of course Frank is not the man to back down on any such occasion as that, and so seizing a huge knife which he happened to have in his pocket, he waited quietly for the shark, which soon came up close to him. Taylor got the best of his shark-ship, however, and succeeded in capturing him and brought him safe to land. The shark measured four feet in length.

A Colored Couple Married After Living Together Twenty-seven Years.

From the Indianapolis Journal, July 30.

A singular wedding occurred last night at the Mayor's office. A colored man named George Gaither, and a colored woman named Julia Ann McGill, both of whom were formerly slaves, have lived together as man and wife for twenty-seven years. In the days of their tender and romantic love, their surroundings were such that the little ceremony required by law to give sanction to intimate relations they felt not required, and without it they shared the same humble cot, and in loving bliss drifted down the stream together. Numerous children were born unto them, and under the encouraging influences of freedom they accumulated quite a small little amount of property. This they decided should descend to their children, and, "to make assurance doubly sure" that the children would get it, they resolved to marry. Gaither procured a license several days ago, and then interviewed his Honor the Mayor, to learn the proper form of the thing. As they were both quite poor but honest, the Mayor promised to do the job free. Accordingly, at 8 o'clock last night they repaired to the City Buildings to consummate the act that ended their sorrows. The bride was dressed in her best garb, in which the bright colors were the prevailing hue, and the bridegroom wore a white vest and her hands inclosed in a pair of white cotton gloves. The bridegroom was arrayed with equal splendor. At the time they arrived, the Marshal appeared with two prisoners, who were to be tried. Gaither insisted that he should be married before them, saying that he had no objections to the number of witnesses or the cause of their presence.

All being ready, the veteran couple stood up, and in the awful silence of the Court-room, the Mayor pronounced them "one." They left the room as soon as it was concluded, their faces beaming with delight, an indication that their long experience in married life was not at all unpleasant. The time for celebrating their silver wedding has been left two years behind.

A Waterspout on Lake Michigan.

From the Toledo (Ohio) Commercial, July 31.

At about 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon a waterspout formed on the lake between Racine and Kenosha, in the track taken by vessels bound Chicagoward. It made its appearance very suddenly, and in a moment was lost to view. While it lasted the air was full of a tremendous roaring roaring noise, dreadful to experience. The sight was grandly terrible. The bark Butcher Boy, on her way to this port, was caught in it and narrowly escaped destruction, with her crew. Her being almost out of its track was all that saved her. As it was, the crew, taken down into the stern, and those on board being entirely unprepared, by the suddenness of the occurrence, were terrified beyond description. The foretopmast and topgallant mast of the bark together with all light spars, were carried away; the rigging was in a twinkling. Her foremast head was also twisted. The intelligence that the Butcher Boy was dismasted and disabled a short distance down the lake was taken to Chicago by Captain A. Ackerman, of the schooner R. Emmons. A tug was sent to her assistance, and she was towed into Chicago.

The Death of Hon. Isaac Toucey.

The Hartford Times, in announcing the death of Ex-Secretary Toucey in that city on Friday morning, says: "He retained his consciousness till the last moment. Half an hour before he died, he bade farewell to his wife and those around his bedside. He was sinking greatly, but his usual calmness did not forsake him. He bore the report of unusual pain without complaint, and with the greatest composure looked over into the Valley of Death while lingering in the shadow which separates certainly at once from life eternal. Only five minutes before he died he attendant put ice to his mouth. In a clear and loud voice, "I am," and when the hand of the attendant, cool from contact with the ice, was placed upon his forehead and withdrawn, Mr. Toucey muttered to have it replaced. Then, with both hands, he took a tumbler of cold water, raised his head, drank copious of it, sinking back upon his pillow he ceased to breathe, and the earthly mission of Isaac Toucey was closed."

A Man Buried Alive—No Attempt to Rescue Him.

From the Leavenworth (Kansas) Times, July 31.

From C. J. Haines, Esq., Route Mail Agent on the Kansas Pacific Railroad, we learn that the will being sunk at Monument Station by the Company caved in on Saturday last while two men were working in it, burying one, while the other escaped by seizing a rope, and was drawn up. It seems that the workmen had sunk the well 100 feet, and were going through a stratum of sand; owing to the security of timber the curbing had been neglected for thirty feet above, and being thus insecure, without a moment's warning the well caved in, burying one man under several feet of earth and sand. The workmen above could distinctly hear his cries for help, and distinguished the words: "Don't leave me." Yet, incredible as it may seem, his companions made no attempt to release him, alleging as an excuse that they were afraid of further caving in of the well. More horrible still, after his cries had ceased, and it was evident that life had fled, these inhuman monsters filled up the well, forever entombing a human being when they might have rescued, or have at least obeyed the common dictates of humanity and have attempted to save.

MONDAY, Aug. 2—A. M.

The business of the past week showed a fair movement, for the season, in all departments. The Import entries of Dry Goods begin to come in freely for the Fall trade, and the amount marketed thus far is rather ahead of last season, and the amount of General Foreign Merchandise and Dry Goods together, upon which the Customs Duties were paid in July, is about ten ⅌ cent. in excess of July, 1868; and the Treasury, at all the ports will probably have received a corresponding increase in its Gold revenues from this source. The Department is still more fortunate in collecting $21,587,000 Currency revenues from Internal sources as against $16,000,000 in the same month last year. From both sources the receipts into the Treasury will probably leave the Public Debt of the United States (including the difference in the accumulated interest,) at least Ten Millions of Dollars less than on the first of July. This is the frequent estimate sent from Washington, though we believe the actual figures on the First of August Schedule of the Public Debt will be found even more favorable. The Exports of Domestic Produce continue to show large gains from this port on the weekly returns of last Summer, and the most decided improvement is found in the article of Grain. This movement becomes doubly important as showing itself on the eve of the Fall receipts at Tide Water from the new crop of Wheat, which, with few or no exceptions, is represented to be large throughout the country. That it is felt to be so by the farmers in the Western States is in evidence through the heavy movement of the Old crop, for several weeks past, at the Lake ports. The Export of Gold and Silver during the week fell, from three millions the week before, down to $631,000, and the price of Gold, after reaching 137½ on Monday or Tuesday, suddenly returned to 136@135¾@135¾ ⅌ cent. This is not so much to be ascribed to the fluctuations in Exchange as to the exceptional character of the Gold movement of the previous week, as well in respect to the amount shipped as in the violent though unsuccessful effort in the Gold Room to force the upward speculation to 140 ⅌ cent. This effort, we believe, has been given over for the present, and, indeed, could find little encouragement in the rates and supply of Exchange made against the Export of Produce and the resumption of purchases, on a large scale, of United States 5-20s for transmission to London and Frankfort. In addition to these favorite Bonds, a considerable business was done in several of the Pacific Railway Mortgages, (Gold bearing,) for the same markets. Of the new Kansas Pacific 7 ⅌ cents (Eastern Division,) an arrangement has been made by the Bankers of the Company, Messrs. Dabney, Morgan & Co., to place a large amount in Germany, and further amounts of the Missouri Pacific have been taken for Frankfort by Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co. The lower rate for Money in London is not without its influence on our Foreign Exchanges, so far as they are supposed to involve the necessity for remitting Gold, through the present or succeeding month, and the time is not distant when our own Bankers will begin to base their calculations upon the new crop, which it is now estimated will reach 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 bales.

The Wall-street markets, other than Gold and Exchange, were irregular on the Railways through the greater part of the week, though showing a more general firmness at the close the previous speculation being chiefly directed to the New-York Roads in which Mr. Vanderbilt holds the controlling interest, and to the Reading Road. In the Public Funds the prices were held firm up to Wednesday noon by the demand for the Sinking Fund, and on the succeeding day an independent movement set in from outside the customary circle of the great dealers, which carried up prices from ⅛ to ¾ ⅌ cent., under the belief that the continued purchases in August for the Sinking Fund, the manifestly free demand for Europe, and fall in the rates for Money here from 7 to 6 ⅌ cent., must soon justify much higher figures than have yet been made for the 5-20s, and by sympathy for the 6 ⅌ cents of 1881, the 10-40-years 5 ⅌ cent., and the 30-years Currency Bonds loaned to the Pacific Roads.

The announcement of the decease of Mr. Hiram Ketchum caused the Stock Exchange Board, of which he was a highly respected member, to adjourn over until Monday, at early hour on Saturday, and no official quotations of Stocks and Bonds were made or printed by the Board. The Exchange Board unanimously adopted a series of Resolutions, reported by a Committee consisting of Messrs. Rufus Hatch, Wheeler and Munson, expressive of the high appreciation of the deceased and the sincere regret for his removal by death. And a large number of the members attended his funeral from his late residence in Fifth-avenue, near Forty-eighth-street, on Sunday afternoon.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

NAPOLEON is severely criticised by parties in Spain for his lenity toward the Carlist conspirators on the frontier. Paris dispatches indicate that the Carlist insurrection is not over. It is reported from Madrid that the Carlists who were taken prisoners at Pampeluna have been tried by Court-martial, but have not yet been sentenced.

A Paris newspaper manager and two editors have been sentenced to a month's imprisonment each, and to pay a heavy fine, for publishing "counsels."

Mr. GLADSTONE'S health has improved, and he is again in London.

The Oxford crew have gone to Pangborne on the Thames to practice, where they get deeper water and a longer course than they had at Putney. It is reported that the Harvard four weigh four pounds more than the Oxfords.

The rule of Austria which limits the appointment of Consuls to the capital and seaports by foreign Governments has been relaxed.

The Presse newspaper of Vienna states that all the official dispatches with Prussia are to be published by von BEUST, to justify his assertion recently made to the Hungarian delegation.

GENERAL.

Advices from Mexico to the 23d state that an insurrection had broken out among the Indians in Yucatan; that the volcanic eruption in Colima was growing worse; and that the Puebla Railroad will open in September. The Mexican Minister to the United States had arrived at Havana.

Attorney-General WILLIAMSON, of Indiana, has decided that colored children in that State are, in virtue of a law passed by the last Legislature, entitled to be organized at once into separate schools, having all the rights and privileges of other schools. It has been contended that their organization into such schools must be postponed until their proportion of the tax can be assessed and collected.

Three Italian boys, strolling musicians, in New-Haven, Conn., got into a fight with a party of "city" boys on Friday, and one of them becoming enraged at the smashing of his violin, stabbed the first boy he got hold of with a small jack-knife, and inflicted dangerous wounds. The musicians then fled, but they were soon found by the Police, and the boy who committed the deed was locked up. He gave his name as ANGELIER PERETTO, and said he had been away from Italy but a year.

The trial of Rev. Mr. LEES, at Pittsburg, Penn., is progressing. He appears to be making a strong defence, and the popular feeling, at this time, seems to be in his favor against his prosecutors, and it is thought that the chances for his being deposed from the ministry are not as great as they were some days since.

The caterpillars are doing considerable damage to the trees on the Boston Common. On Friday a steam fire engine played a powerful stream on several of the trees, and thousands of the worms were destroyed.

It was at first suspected that the train on the Memphis and Louisville Railroad was thrown off the track with a view to conceal the robbery of the Adams Express safe, which was known to contain $100,000. The safe was recovered, however, on Thursday, and was found unopened. The heat of the fire had destroyed its contents. It is reported that all the wounded passengers left at Clarksville are in a comfortable condition and out of danger. The same is true of those brought to Louisville, with the exception of Mr. MCCOLL. Louisville papers award high praise to three discharged soldiers, Sergeants H. B. MYERS, and R. P. GILL, of Rockford, Ill., and Private A. P. LONG, of Nashua, N. H., for their gallantry in endeavoring to rescue and care for the wounded. Mr. GILL rescued Mrs. MCCOLL, and Mr. LONG extricated the lifeless body of Mr. MCCOLL after the train had caught fire.

OLIVER A. MORGAN has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, in the Criminal Court in Terre Haute, Ind., and was on Thursday sentenced to be hanged on the 1st of September next. To the question of the Judge, after he had announced the verdict by the jury, if he had anything to say, the prisoner replied: "May it please the Court, I have nothing further to say, except that the case has been hurried from the first, and that, too, amid great excitement, so that a fair trial was hardly possible."

A little girl, 9 years of age, died in Pittsburg, Penn., on Thursday, from lock-jaw, the result, it is alleged, of an operation performed at a dentist's office, in extracting a tooth.

Mrs. WILLIAM BRADLEY, of East Warren, Conn., was killed, and her little boy fatally injured by the Shore Line express train from New-London on Saturday morning. They were walking over the bridge that spans Saltonstall Lake when the train came upon them. The engineer sounded the whistle, but before they could reach the embankment, the engine struck Mrs. BRADLEY, killing her instantly, and at the same time throwing her little boy into the lake. She was 30 years of age and her son 6.

It is estimated that the expenses of the Spanish in Cuba for August will amount to $1,200,000; for the War Department, $800,000; Navy Department, $200,000; Civil Department, $150,000; miscellaneous, $300,000.

The funeral services of Ex-Secretary ISAAC TOUCEY will take place in Hartford, Conn., this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

A Court of Inquiry will convene at the Portsmouth, N. H., Navy-yard, on the 1st of August, to investigate the charges of brutality to seamen, alleged against Lieutenant-Commander EARLY, of the Pawnee. The Court will be composed of Captain GUEST and Commanders TEMPLE, WELLS and MCCONLEY.

Two fires occurred in Concord, N. H., Saturday night and yesterday morning. By the most destructive of the two a loss of about $40,000 was sustained. The flames burst forth in Main-street.

A man named ALVIN BLAKE, of Boston, under arrest at Portland, Me., charged with robbing Adams Express Company of $700, claims to be one of the New-York Ocean Bank robbers, but his story is not believed.

The funeral of the late HENRY KEEP took place yesterday afternoon. The remains were taken to the Brookside Cemetery, at Watertown, N. Y., for interment.

It has been decided to hold the Mississippi Valley Commercial Convention at Keokuk, Iowa, on the 7th of September.

An Elmira dispatch reports the murder by unknown persons of a man named BRADSHAW, and the alleged killing of an infant by a domestic (its mother) and her employer. Both parties in the latter case were arrested.

The Mississippi National Republican State Convention for the nomination of State officers is to be held in Jackson on Friday, Aug. 20.

Two more cases of death through the carelessness of druggists' clerk's have just occurred. In Baltimore a child has been killed, according to the verdict of the Coroner's jury, "by opium poisonous, administered through the gross carelessness of the apothecary;" and in Boston an infant "by repeated poisonous doses of laudanum carelessly dispensed for paregoric," by a druggist's clerk. In the last-mentioned case the Coroner's jury affirm that "the custom of allowing boys or other unqualified persons to act as dispensing clerks is one fraught with danger to the community, and should be discountenanced by the profession at large."

There is authority for stating that at a meeting of prominent New-Yorkers at Saratoga recently, WILLIAM B. ASTOR expressed his intention to complete the Washington National Monument at his own expense.

Anniversary services in commemoration of emancipation in the British West Indies were held last evening at Zion Church, in Bleecker-street. Rev. WM. F. BUTLER, the pastor, delivered a sermon, in the course of which he alluded to the ill-treatment of colored men at the South, and declared that the Administration was responsible for it.

Archbishop MCCLOSKEY delivered his farewell sermon yesterday at the Cathedral in this City, explaining the plans and purposes of the Ecumenical Council, asserting its infallibility, and declaring its conclusions, indorsed by the Pope, to be inspired.

The August term of the Court of General Sessions will commence to-day.

A mass meeting of the journeymen tailors was held at the Germania Rooms yesterday afternoon, when it was unanimously resolved to continue the strike until the employers acceded to an increase of wages.

The Republican Party in Virginia.

For the first time in the Virginia contest, the Wells section of the Republican Party has gained a moral advantage over the supporters of the Governor elect. It has exhibited itself in the attitude of a section anxious for the restoration of cordial party relations with the Republicans from whom it separated in the election. It has taken the first step toward reconciliation and reunion. And the Chairman of the Walker Committee has erred in not responding cordially and affirmatively to the proposition submitted by the Executive of the Wells organization.

The Republicans of Virginia are divided, and the question to be answered is, Shall the division continue, or shall it be healed, and party unity restored, now that the exciting causes of mischief have passed away? Nothing can be gained by belittling the differences, or by pretensions to superior orthodoxy on either side. That which challenges attention is the fact of division, the responsibility for which must be borne quite as much by those who perpetuate it as by those with whom it originated. It began with the Walker Republicans, and they can scarcely afford to assume the odium incident to its continuance.

In the first instance, as this journal has steadily maintained, Mr. WALKER and his Republican friends were justified in protesting against, and in striving to defeat, the nomination of WELLS and his associates on a proscriptive platform. There could be no genuine reconstruction if the State Constitution were ratified in the form adopted by the Convention. And when the adherents of WELLS constructed a ticket involving the ratification of the Constitution in its entirety, test oath, disfranchisement and all, a second Republican nomination became a necessity. The election of WALKER was the result,—an election all the more satisfactory because effected on a platform in harmony with the known views of the President and the conciliatory policy of the Republican Party in other States. The gratification afforded by the event has been strengthened by the judicious declarations of the successful candidate. He has avoided himself of more than one opportunity to assert the antagonism of his purposes with those of the Administration. He has avowed a determination to adhere to its policy, and to uphold in good faith the results of reconstruction, regardless of the efforts of the former enemies of both. By adopting this course, he dispelled many fears, and awakened a friendly interest in his future as Governor of the State. Whatever confidence he has evinced has, however, been predicated upon the supposition that he will act in harmony with the Republican Party. He cannot claim identification with the Administration and at the same time cultivate fellowship with its active opponents. His title to the support of the party whose policy he professes to adopt will become invalid the moment he proves indifferent to the guarantees of its continuance, which only Republican unity can afford.

The ground gained by WALKER since the election was gained at the expense of WELLS and his adherents. Wrong in the construction of their platform, wrong in the position assumed during the canvass, the leading friends of WELLS put themselves still further in the wrong, first by impugning the popular verdict, next by threatening its reversal on the floor of Congress. Their action in this respect seemed to reveal an intolerant factiousness, which made us more grateful for their defeat. But wiser counsels have within the last few days prevailed. The newspaper exponent of the defeated ticket, yielding, perhaps, to the almost unanimous judgment of the party throughout the country in favor of WALKER, suddenly modified its tone, and in a quiet way accepted the situation. It became evident not only that there would be no further factious opposition on the part of the Wells men, but that they were preparing to abandon their separate organization and consolidate anew with those from whom they had been temporarily separated.

This purpose, prudent and honorable, as it seems to us, had expression in the letter we published on Saturday, addressed by JOHN W. JENKINS, Chairman of the Wells Committee, to Dr. GILMER, Chairman of the Walker Committee. In this communication Mr. JENKINS attributed the division to difference of opinion as to men rather than any substantial variance as to principles. Believing, as most of us do, that the future prosperity of the State depends upon the organization of its Government "in harmony with the Administration of General GRANT and the policy of the Congress of the United States and the great Republican Party of the country," he suggests the propriety of uniting the two wings of the Republican Party, "and establishing a liberal Republican organization, in whose ranks all who really love the Union may join, whether they may have been buttoned in the gray or the blue." With the view of effecting this consolidation, he proposes practical measures, and invites the concurrent action of the other Committee. All this is admirable. The object sought is as creditable as the temper in which it is approached. And speaking in behalf of more than a hundred thousand Republican voters, the weight attaching to Mr. JENKINS' proposition cannot be questioned.

Dr. GILMER's response, we regret to say, is much less satisfactory. Ignoring the hundred thousand voters for WELLS, every one of whom is Republican, he "cannot admit that the party is divided!" He insists "that the Grant-Walker Party is the National Republican Party of Virginia, representing the policy of the President and of Congress, and as such has no division to heal." He alludes to the indorsement of Republican principles by the white men of the State, and complacently invites the Wells wing to swell their ranks without more ado. We cannot applaud the attitude thus assumed by Dr. GILMER. It is in effect a rejection of the proposition submitted to him—a proposition, be it remembered, for a reunion of two sections of Republicans, and the formation of a "liberal Republican organization," the policy of Congress and the National Administration being, as we understand it, the basis. What is the inference? Are we to conclude that the Walker Republicans prefer dependence upon Democratic support to the support which a reunited Republican Party would assure? Do they propose to conduct the State Government without reference to the future of the party, on the hypothesis that the majority that elected WALKER may be relied upon to carry other elections? If this is the meaning of Dr. GILMER's reply, we fear that it bodes only evil. For the permanent division of the Republican Party implies, in the end, the triumph of its opponents; and in the interim it involves antagonism where unity is desirable, and a series of coalitions in and out of the Legislature, as demoralizing as they are dangerous.

Mr. WALKER owes to himself, to the Republicans who sustain him, and to the Administration with which he claims affinity, some better treatment of the Wells overture than has yet been accorded to it. He ought not to forget that the course before him and his State is still beset with difficulties, which will probably be aggravated or abated in proportion to the good faith with which he and his friends act toward the Republican Party.

The Juntas and the Fenians.

Curious rumors are afloat, connecting the names of the Cuban Juntas and the Fenian Circles in alleged combined or cooperative lawlessness. The stories came simultaneously from several noteworthy quarters—from Washington, from Montreal, from Toronto, from Ottawa. The one current in the national capital—thus far traced to no trustworthy basis—is that a proposal has been made that the Juntas and Fenians join forces with a double programme of "freedom" for Cuba and Canada. The Ottawa version, though less definite in shape, was more practical in result, since the authorities sent off a telegram immediately to know "how soon the gunboats on the lakes could be ready for active service," receiving, it is said, the very reassuring reply, "three hours." The Toronto rumor is told by the Telegraph of that place, which says: "The general feeling naturally points to some Fenian movement; but we can scarcely think that the successors of that Society are now such as would enable them to renew the raid of 1866. There is some talk of the Cuban Junta, of New-York, moving its quarters to Canada. Its action might tend to involve us in a breach of neutrality, against which it is necessary to be provided." Whereupon, the Telegraph proposes for the motto of the hour the old Roundhead watchword, "Trust in God and keep your powder dry." Finally, one of the Montreal papers declares, on what it professes to be good authority:

"A secret effort has lately been made on the part of certain Fenian leaders to induce the rank and file of their organization to agree venture upon a raid into Canada. A portion of them were to have been first sent into the country by twos and threes, and meeting by appointment at certain points in some of the larger towns of Ontario, to try and do a little in the way of demonstration and assassination, while a formidable armed force crossed the border."

Touching this whole business, of which, from the variety of information we have here cited, a sufficient notion may be formed, it is enough to say that it bids fair chiefly to "plague the inventors." Externally resembling each other in some particulars, the Cuban and Fenian movements are not only essentially unlike, but the disposition to yoke them together, so making them stand or fall together, and trading the support of the "rank and file" to one cause or the other, is utterly void of justice. Probably the plea of those engaged in this curious copartnership would be that "when tyrants combine, freemen must unite." Admitting all their postulates or premises, we might be misled to grant their conclusions; but by what right, under what misused invocation of "freedom," they propose to trench on the soil of Canada, and disturb the homes of those who have never harmed them, remains mysterious.

Two wrongs do not make a right; and hence, any project of uniting the Fenian violation of our Neutrality laws with the Cuban violation of the same laws, instead of adding dignity and impressiveness to the combined cause, would only hang a double millstone of lawlessness about its neck, to sink it in the sea of popular opinion. For the moment, it may appear to the leaders that the project of seizing on Canada as a "strategic base" for operations upon Cuba would, at one stroke, arouse the United States in behalf of Cuba and Fenianism, because England would, perforce, be on the contrary side, while it would also aid the Cuban cause directly by the volunteering of large numbers of the late Irish-American veterans of both the Union and Confederate armies under the flag of CESPEDES. Or, taken in yet another light, it may be surmised or agreed that by a frank alliance of Fenianism with Cuba in the latter's hour of distress, free Cuba, in her turn, will one day acknowledge the obligation, and permit her soil to be used as a retreat and a base for operations against Canada or Ireland. And, while we may smile at the extravagance of these complicated calculations, (all of which neglect Mrs. Glass' precaution,) yet we must remember that Fenian strategy has never been noted for its practicability, nor Fenian flights of fancy for their ballast of common sense.

In any case, however, as we have said, the engineers of the new enterprise would most likely be "hoist with their own petard," since, where a comparatively slight and barren effort to evade the Neutrality laws might be dealt with leniently, a deliberate combination of the Cuba-Canadian sort, to use this country as a mere refuge for lawlessness so coolly bargained for, would excite general indignation. The cause of Cuba would lose more than it would gain by such an alliance, since the present struggle in Great Britain to do justice to Ireland has taken the wind out of Fenianism. The revolution in Ireland, the ardent sympathy therewith of Irish immigrants in our country, the general disgust of our people at the manner in which "British neutrality" had been allowed to bolster up the Confederacy, and, finally, the natural restlessness of a large body of gallant ex-volunteers seeking a fresh cause to lend their arms to, were partial palliations of the Fenianism of 1865, though no excuses for its raids on Canada in 1866. But to seek to resurrect that sentiment now, and to ally it with the Cuban movement, coolly proposing to implicate our country in violations of international courtesy and law, is another matter, and would not be so charitably treated as in 1866, or even as in the case of the Junta just liberated from arrest.

However, we do not imagine the contingency just contemplated. We have been drawn into the discussion of an improbability by the number of rumors which have been based upon it. In no case, however, will it do harm to let public sentiment express itself very positively upon the stern treatment which such suggested movements might expect.

New-York Private Schools.

In the recent discussions in the Board of Education on the question of the priority of classical or scientific studies in the Free Academy, most parents who are schooling their children in private schools must have felt a certain envy of this public institution, where either branches could be thoroughly taught.

The question with private citizens of means, who do not wish to use the public endowments, is not as to priority of science or the classics, but as to having either taught well. The modern improvement in education, approved by the best minds, is to commence by disciplining the perceptive faculties of children and youth. We have no hesitation in saying that this new method, carried out in our best public primary schools, is far in advance of the method of our best private schools. But beyond this, the next natural step in the education of boys and girls, say between twelve and fifteen years, is the training of natural science. Not, be it observed, the memorizing of definitions or terms, but the use of the senses and the intellect, in observing and analyzing the common every-day phenomena of nature. The true teacher for children of that age should be able to walk out with them in the fields, and instruct them in classifying every flower, and weed, and stone, and insect they see. Science should begin with their senses, and then they should be drilled in classification. From this the step to explaining phenomena, or to reasoning, to giving, for instance, the natural causes of the most common sights and facts in nature is an easy one. The child, under this system, sees that its faculties which are most trained—its observing powers; it is then disciplined to exactitude; its memory is cultivated; the alphabet of science (from which, hereafter, whole volumes will arise) is learned, and then its reasoning faculties are called out; and it enters life with some of the most practical and useful powers well cultivated—with a habit of close observation, with the practice of exactness and the custom of reasoning from clearly defined premises, and a training to classification and organization. Natural Science ought unquestionably to be at the basis of all youthful education. Founded upon this, must be a training in language. The peculiar influence of the classics upon taste, mental accuracy and nicety, their immense value as an analysis of grammar and language, and their historical importance, can never be supplied, we believe, by any modern languages. Besides, the boy or girl who has Latin well, can easily acquire any Romanic tongue.

But the practical difficulty in New-York is to have either of these great branches thoroughly and scientifically taught. If there is a school where boys or girls are instructed in Natural Science after the object system, we should be glad to know of it. If there is any academy where youth can learn mineralogy, geology, botany or chemistry, in a natural way, it has never come to our knowledge. We doubt, too, if in many private schools the classics be taught thoroughly and according to the best labors. It is notorious in the best New-England Colleges, that New-York boys are seldom as well drilled in preparatory studies as those from other sections. The causes of this inferiority of our private schools, we believe to lie with the public, who are too indifferent to the whole matter to demand anything better.

The Bankers' and Brokers' Tax.

Collector J. F. BAILEY, of New-York, telegraphed the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this morning that the bankers and brokers of that City, who some time ago so fiercely disputed the payment of the tax upon the capital employed by them in their business, have all paid their assessment, except about twenty, and that these twenty do not exceed $10 each in amount.—Washington Dispatch.

This question is altogether too important to the Government and to the honest hard-working tax-payers of the country to be "whistled down the wind" in this manner by Mr. Collector BAILEY or anybody else. A law has been on the statute books for a number of years requiring all persons doing the business of bankers to make monthly returns of the average amount of capital employed by them, and of the average amount of deposits held by them, and to pay a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. per month thereon. Until the advent of the late Assessor this law had been practically a dead letter, so far at least as the great money centre of this continent is concerned—the Thirty-second District of this State. The Street was found to be in arrears for more than three years of taxes, but the law only authorized the Assessor to make assessments for fifteen months' arrearages. This was attempted to be enforced, and the bankers resisted the claim. A test case was made in the case of Messrs. CLARK, DODGE & CO., who appealed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. After a careful and patient hearing, in which the bankers were represented by the ablest counsel to be had, the Commission rendered a decision fully sustaining the ground taken by the Assessor. That assessment was for the fifteen months next preceding the month of April, and was for the sum, in round numbers, of $20,000.

We are now told that the "bankers and brokers who so fiercely disputed the payment of the tax upon the capital employed by them have all paid their assessments except about twenty." This is gratifying intelligence. But Mr. BAILEY will find that the people will insist on knowing what has become of the arrearages. At the lowest estimate made by the bankers themselves, they are indebted for the period of fifteen months next preceding his assuming the duties of Collector of that district, more than $3,000,000. Have those back taxes been assessed and collected? If not, why not? That is the question which cannot be winked out of sight, and which neither Collector BAILEY nor the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has any right to suffer to be neglected. We do not intend to permit it to be lost sight of.

MINOR TOPICS.

The first murder-trial in this State in which we have seen the working of the new law permitting alleged criminals to testify upon their own trial, was that of Officer CAMPBELL last week. We were first led to advocate the passage of this law last Winter, by having observed the valuable aid which justice received from a similar law in Massachusetts in the trial of Deacon ANDREWS for murder. The applications of the law in this State, thus far, have shown its great advantage. In the lesser criminal trials it has always assisted justice.

We are pleased to hear that the Administration will not "help" Judge DENT to become Governor of Mississippi. This is right. The Administration ought to mind its own business and leave the management of State elections to other parties.

We suppose most of our American editors will be very angry at the French Court for the severe punishment just inflicted upon the manager and two of the editors of a Paris newspaper for publishing canards, or false news. Had we such a law in this country, and were it enforced, a good many newspapers would doubtless suffer; but would not the public get some advantage?

A portion of the plate printers are on a strike, and one of their leaders declares that the men are "determined to hold out until the last dollar in the treasury of the society is exhausted." That is possible; but have they determined on their next step? After exhaustion, what?

Now that we have authentic intelligence that the new Secretary of the Navy is open to the appeals of patriotism in the matter of naval nomenclature, we feel relieved. The reason he has not yet restored to our ships the real genuine original American names which Ex-Secretary MORSE caused to be changed, is that he has not yet had time. It is to be hoped he will find time as soon as he can make it convenient, in order that old and well-tried names may be put on the craft which has been created, and also that public feeling may be appeased.

Taxmanny, we learn, proposes to make our present Police Justices appear respectable by comparison with their successors. Good Heavens, we pray you, spare us!

We are quite sure that the Canadians have no cause to apprehend a Fenian raid at this time; and though it may be a fine thing to hold all the militia in "readiness to march to the frontier at an hour's notice," there is no danger of their encountering any enemy when they get there. We know from past experience that our Fenian warriors make a tremendous hullaballoo when they propose to do anything; and the Canadians need have no fear that the Fenians will not give them sufficient warning in advance of any movement they propose to make.

The Spanish Generals in Cuba are particularly fond of defeating the forces of General JORDAN with awful slaughter. It would seem that he must have had an army greater than that of Sennacherib. We understand, however, that JORDAN himself says he has never yet had an encounter with the enemy worth talking about; he is only preparing for a campaign.

The night scenario which the more intelligent English Liberals desire to bring before Parliament is one in favor of popular education. We must commend their wisdom. Nothing would do more for the elevation of the lower English masses than the establishment of such a school system as exists in this State—with whatever modifications may be necessary for the condition of society in England. The school system of Scotland, as lately improved, is admirably adapted to the popular wants of the country, where, however, public schools have been established in the parishes for centuries.

The French Cable Company have been shrewd enough to announce that they will reduce their prices below the present cable rates. If the new line does the business as well as the old line, so as to command public support, the old line will of course be compelled to lower its terms. The receipts and profits, as exhibited from time to time to the public, have shown that it could very safely make still further reduction in the price it charges per word.

The authorities have seen fit to send two officers to California to bring back the notorious "Reddy the Blacksmith," and some one curious in such matters has calculated that it will cost $1,400 to restore to us the coveted outlaw. In view of the fact that he is, in some way, almost certain to escape the penalty of his crimes after he is returned, we incline to share in the opinion that it would have been as well to leave him where he is. Such a creature as "Reddy" was not likely to have a very long lease on the Pacific slope.

We cannot vouch for the truth of the report that Mr. WILLIAM B. ASTOR has publicly expressed his intention to complete the Washington National Monument at his own expense. But it is a fact that his father, JOHN JACOB ASTOR, intended to provide for the erection of an immense equestrian statue of WASHINGTON, with an imposing structure over and around it. He gave up the project in favor of the building of the Astor Library. If Mr. W. B. ASTOR really entertains the idea ascribed to him of raising a monument to WASHINGTON, it would be far better to erect it in the Central Park than to attempt the completion of the dismal failure at the National Capital.

Trade strikes, in this country, are not, as a rule, the cause of any disturbance of the public peace. In the tailors' strike there have been a few squabbles, in individual cases, between the men and their employers; but they have not amounted to anything. Affairs of this kind result in nothing but injury to the interests of those more directly concerned.

Disease and death are disseminated from hundreds of stands throughout the City by means of stale, unwholesome fish, fruits and vegetables, as well as scattered broadcast in the same guise from the wagons of licensed venders. These dealers, as a rule, only obtain the refuse of Washington and Fulton Markets in the first place, and what is no longer entirely fresh and wholesome when they buy it, is very generally unfit for use when they sell it. Purchasers should be protected from the greed of these vultures, and, presuming that the matter is within the jurisdiction of the Board of Health, we see no reason why it should not be speedily reformed.

The British Ministry have announced their purpose of introducing a bill at the next session of Parliament concerning naturalization and allegiance. It will be remembered that REVERDY JOHNSON, acting on behalf of this Government, negotiated with the British Government a treaty relating to naturalization and allegiance, which was ratified by the Senate, and is now in force. We suppose the object of the new bill to be to conform the local laws of England to the terms of this international treaty.

We do not see how, in the present state of Spanish finances, it will be possible much longer for the Regency to supply the funds required to keep up the war in Cuba. This war has thus far been a fearfully expensive business, and has not only devoured the revenues of the island, but has constantly called for remittances from Madrid.

The Post hopes that the verdict of the jury in Officer CAMPBELL'S case "will encourage the Police to still greater efficiency." We hope so, too; but, at the same time, it would be a mistake for any officer to find in it encouragement for the use of the revolver when the baton would be sufficient.

We see it stated that Mr. JULIUS BING has prepared a history of the late well-known and distinguished Russo-American Count GUROWSKI. Before publishing it, Mr. BING ought to make some attempt to secure as much as possible of the Count's correspondence, which would constitute not the least striking part of his memoirs.

President MCCOSH, of Princeton College, said, at the recent meeting of the Philological Association, that he was "prepared, from a pretty extensive acquaintance with the universities of Great Britain, and with some of those on the Continent, to say that the average attainments of college graduates here and there are about equal." So much has been so often said about the superiority of the English and Continental college course over the American, that we are pleased with this remark from a scholar so well entitled to pass judgment.

The Spaniards are taking the first lessons in Protestantism; they have been able to get some heresy was burned out of the Pentacts. The Protestants are active in establishing places of worship there and distributing Bibles; and the Liberal Government is protecting them in a way that shows that the religious freedom proclaimed in the Constitution is not a sham. In the Spanish countries of this continent Protestantism has also begun to appear. We hear of its spread in several parts of Mexico; and our Chili correspondent has given an account of an "event of great significance" that has taken place in Santiago—to wit: the opening of a Spanish Protestant church. He says it signifies the "final triumph of a principle," and that it "may now be known abroad that religious freedom is the recognized law and practice of Chili." These are indeed remarkable signs. In the sixteenth century, the Reformation made great progress among the Spaniards; but it could not exist before the terrible persecutions carried on by the Church and State. Now there is freedom for the Spanish race on both continents.

JAMAICA.

Jamaica Improving—Governor Grant and the Chinese the Cause—Projects to Improve—The Cuban Filibustering Vessels—The Lehave and Grapeshot Condemned and Seized—Full Particulars of the Government's Action.

From Our Own Correspondent.

KINGSTON, Tuesday, July 20, 1869.

Jamaica is looking up, and improvements are going up everywhere. Many abandoned plantations are again placed in a condition to become a source of revenue to their proprietors, most of whom reside in England, and who hitherto have considered their Jamaica estates as entirely unvaluable, and more a source of annoyance than of profit.

Real estate has improved in value, and the aid given and promised by the Government to various steamship and telegraph companies has infused new life among the old residents, and even sanguine people are already laying plans on the probable return of the wealth formerly enjoyed by the inhabitants of this island. The want of energy and enterprise has been severely felt, but must be excused when one considers that the almost total absence of the necessary working classes needed to cultivate the rich lands of this country of necessity produced such a state of affairs. Hundreds of fourth and fifth rate lawyers and doctors abound in the island, who starved and slaved until they obtained some insignificant position under the Government, producing a great deal of un-Anglo-Saxon but thoroughly American Spanish or pure Spanish system of corruption and bribery among the various employes, and even higher members of the Judiciary. The course pursued by Sir JOHN PETER GRANT has not only redeemed the island from this blot on her escutcheon, but he has also inaugurated such a system of justice, watchfulness and judgment, that the debt and taxation of the island have decreased materially, and a brighter future has already begun to dawn on this impoverished country. But the principal cause of the progress and advance of Jamaica is undoubtedly due to the irrepressible Chinaman, who is busily engaged in changing the abandoned ruins of valuable plantations into productive and well-looking estates, filling the pockets of the planter and merchant. Several thousand more of the natives of the Grand Empire are expected within the next few months. The railway extension from Kingston to Old Harbor has been opened to the public; a riot of the laborers was promptly suppressed by the Police.

Mr. HILL is attempting to form a society of a "Planters' Company," specially designed for the restoration of sugar plantations in Jamaica by "middle-class men," who, being sugar planters out of employment, but possessing small capital, desire, by a union of effort, to render themselves independent in the colony. Mr. HILL is a planter of St. Thomas Parish, and gives a very lucid and apparently feasible plan to make his project a success.

The Spanish frigate-of-war Fernando el Catolico arrived at this port on the 26th ult., with the British schooner Lehave in tow of her, which schooner, in accordance with instructions received at Havana, she delivered over to "the highest authority" in this island. It will be remembered that this schooner was captured on the high seas in tow of the British steamer Clara Helena, (late American steamer Mount Vernon,) on her way between Inagua and St. Marc, and she was taken by the Fernando el Catolico to Havana, where the authorities refused to accept of her as a Spanish prize, but by the advice of Commodore PHILLIMORE they had her sent on to Kingston, Jamaica, (the port for which she had originally cleared,) that she might be dealt with by the Law Courts, for carrying articles contraband of war. She was placed in charge of the Customs authorities on the 28th ultimo, and her cargo was examined by the officers of that department soon after her arrival. She was found with a clearance from Boston, for Kingston, Jamaica; the Customs say with "Grease," as they read it, but on examination of the cargo she was found to have on board not "grease," but gunpowder and munitions of war. Others say, "G. mds." (general merchandise) is how they read the clearance, and not "grease." Who comes nearest a correct reading of the ship's clearance, we have not the means of judging; but whether it be on this ground, or on the ground of the Lehave having on board munitions of war, of American manufacture, (and from an American port,) which are prohibited from being landed here, we cannot say; but the cargo was seized by advice of Her Majesty's Attorney-General, and is valued at $10,000. The Captain protested, and has abandoned his vessel, we hear, throwing the responsibility of these proceedings on those who have had violent hands upon his vessel and her cargo. The cargo is being landed—the powder at the magazine at Fort Augusta, while the other portions of her cargo will be brought up and landed on the Customs wharf, to await the determination of the Government, or the decision of the Judges before whom the case will be brought.

The American schooner Grapeshot, which arrived at Falmouth some weeks ago with a cargo of arms and ammunition on board, has been sold to Mr. ROBIN for $650, but her cargo, like that of the Lehave, has been seized by the officers of Her Majesty's Customs, under an order of the Governor, who has been advised in Privy Council proceedings by Her Majesty's Attorney-General. The Captain of this vessel refusing to give bail to appear to an action at the instance of some merchants in Montego Bay, with whom he was in treaty, or under engagement to sell the schooner, has been lodged in jail, and now threatens to sue out against the Marshal an action for false imprisonment.

The British steamer Columbia, (late American steamer Quaker City,) arrived at this port on the 20th June, and sailed on the 21st inst. for St. Marc, Hayti, where she arrived on the 4th, and met the Delphine, (late American steamer Florida,) and the British steamer Clara Helena, (late American steamer Mount Vernon.)

The British steamer Clara Helena, belonging to the Dominican revolutionists, arrived here on Wednesday, the 14th inst., from St. Marc. It is reported that her crew is out of order, and that she will shortly leave this port for New-York to discharge her cargo on her owners.

The [illegible] of Commodore [illegible] of three steamers, were sent out to the south, [illegible] on Morant Bay and has proven a failure. The hull and rigging has been sold for [illegible].

The Prussian frigate Victoria, Captain MANDELY, left this port on Saturday, the 24th ult., for Santiago de Cuba and the Havana. She took a mail from this port, for Santiago, and if letters received by Cuban refugees speak the truth, it would appear that the letters, when handed over to the Spanish Post Office, were opened by the authorities there, and that numerous arrests in the city followed, and were the consequence of these proceedings. All the Jamaica newspapers were barred, as their circulation in Cuba was considered dangerous to Spanish rule.

TENNESSEE POLITICS.

What Will be the Result of the Election—Johnson's Return to the Senate Almost Certain—Brave Sevier and Brownlow Added Him!—A New Explanation of Brownlow's Strange Course—The Election to be Contested.

From Our Own Correspondent.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Wednesday, July 28, 1869.

The election for Governor and members of the General Assembly takes place one week from to-morrow, and it requires no prescience to foretell the result. It cannot even be difficult to foretell to what extent the new Democracy, allied with SEVIER and his heroes, will carry its measures of reform and proscription. The certain prospects of success have already developed the plans of the new coalition, and we have in the columns of Democratic journals and in the speeches of Democratic candidates intimations of the policy to be pursued. Even while these developments are plainly unfolding their whole scheme, we have the spectacle of SEVIER and BROWNLOW disclaiming any desire or intention to aid in their consummation. While SEVIER solemnly assures his deluded Republican followers that he will not permit his registrars to disregard the laws by issuing certificates to those not entitled to them, these same registrars—selected in many instances for their duplicity—openly and defiantly annul the laws and scatter their certificates far and wide, to minors and to the unenfranchised, without any reference to their rights under the law.

While BROWNLOW bitterly denounces those who accuse him of fellowship with JOHNSON, or of a coalition to effect his election, JOHNSON quietly travels over the State, and with the power given to his friends by the perfidy of SEVIER, BROWNLOW & Co., plots and plans his reelection to the Senate. Of course it was expected that BROWNLOW would disclaim any such intentions, and SEVIER deny that his registration lead to any such result; but cannot all same men see as well as they must, just where their selfish ambition has led them? Why deny that they wished to secure JOHNSON's return to the Senate, when every man in the State knows that if it had not been for their inordinate lust for power and public patronage, the machinery of registration would not now be in the hands of the Democracy, but that all liberal reforms would have been effected by Republicans themselves. Enough, I say, is already developed to show how inconsistent such disclaimers are, and to indicate plainly the extent of the coming Democratic victory, and the changes to follow.

Governor SENTER's election is certain by a majority which depends entirely upon the fidelity with which the registrars have discharged the duty confided to them. Nominated originally by a few Republicans, nearly all of whom abandoned him the moment he gave proof of the betrayal planned and negotiated by his friends, he is to-day the candidate of the Democracy, and his election will be secured through their votes. To claim that he is a Republican candidate is the sheerest nonsense. His Republican votes can easily be counted on thumbs and fingers. Every day the dividing line becomes plainer and plainer. Having secured his election through Democratic votes, his Administration will necessarily be Democratic. As far as he goes voluntarily in this direction his troubles will be few, but the moment he attempts to act for himself that moment his servitude begins. The movement he begun by his new system of registration is already far beyond his control, and he will be completely at the mercy of the new power he has enthroned. His election on the first Thursday of August is therefore the beginning of a new dispensation of the Nashy Democracy. "We shall see then what we shall see."

The General Assembly will be divided into three parties—the Johnson men, the Senter men, and the Stokes men. The former and the latter will be the controlling elements. My own judgment is that the first element will be strong enough to secure the election of JOHNSON to the Senate and to shape and control the legislation of the State. I call it the Johnson element; for, though Democratic in name, his influence will control their deliberations and acts. He has purposely abstained from much public speaking, for fear of arousing united and powerful opposition, or of disturbing the sensibilities of the new converts. The "Senter Republicans," while working exactly into his hands, have trusted on his keeping quiet, so as not to embarrass them or frighten off the weak-kneed. But while keeping off from the stump he has been industriously snapping out his campaign, and the results of his labors will, I think, be demonstrated at the polls.

General STOKES has made a gallant fight, but the combinations against him have been too powerful. The whole machinery of registration is in SEVIER's hands, and by it he not only makes his voters, but, better than all, counts them. The majorities in some of the counties are already determined on. The gentlemen who hold in their hands the political power of Hamilton County—Chattanooga—are so proficient that the majority for SENTER is already fixed at one thousand. If he lives to hold another election he will become quite as expert as BROWNLOW was accused of being. The canvass in West Tennessee attracts but little attention. SENTER seems to find his record while a member of the rebel Legislature as of some advantage to him there, and he is making the most of it. The friends of General STOKES, notwithstanding the current seems against them, feel confident of success. But the returns of the judges of election, will show a large majority for SENTER, I think.

That General STOKES intends to contest the election of SENTER I think is pretty certain. I know nothing of my own knowledge of his intentions, and therefore do not speak with authority. I know only that the indications seem that way. If the Franchise laws of the State are binding and in force, SENTER's whole system of registration has been an open, barefaced violation of law, for which he and his registrars can be held to trial. Two-thirds of those enfranchised within the past two months are not entitled to certificates under the law. That they hold certificates and are (notwithstanding what I have said) legal voters, is owing to the wise (?) and healthful (?) provisions of the franchise laws. It is fortunate for Governor BROWNLOW that he is now where the new system of registration is in accord with his new policy. It would have been true poetic justice if the iniquities of this whole system could have been demonstrated to his prejudice. If the monstrous machine could have been worked by the Democracy to effect his overthrow, it would have been a gratifying spectacle. It was a system peculiarly adapted to his ideas of electoral purity and power. He used it arbitrarily, and freely, and if it could have survived the aegis unity of overthrowing him and his friends, one of the greatest lessons of history would have been reversed.

I have heard many reasons given for the monstrous policy pursued by BROWNLOW in the canvass, all of which do him no credit; but one of the latest explanations given is interesting, and furnishes an item of news. It may be news to your readers to learn that a case is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States involving the constitutionality of our Franchise laws. The case was argued at great length and with ability last Winter before a full Bench. I am informed on very good authority that a decision against the constitutionality of the law was determined on before the Court adjourned, but was not announced because it was thought that in the present canvass the question would be settled by the people themselves, and the excitement and contest which such a decision would necessarily have provoked be avoided. The prediction of the Judges has been realized, and the question is now forever settled—settled without violence and bloodshed, which is fortunate for the State. The fact that the Court had determined to decide against the Franchise laws was known to Governor BROWNLOW before he left Washington, or soon thereafter. How far this information influenced him to make the movements he has made, and thereby gain favor with the new party in power, I leave for your readers to determine. His new allies all deny the sincerity of his conversion. Of all the expressions of his course the one charge is so outrageous to the party I have heard.

OMEGA.

A Blackguard from General Stokes.

General STOKES has addressed the following note to the editor of the Nashville (Tenn.) Republican Banner, and it is published in that paper:

CITY HOTEL, July 24, 1869.

Editor Republican Banner:

As you seem determined to persist in the charge that I had the ear of JOE WHEELER cut off, I ask you, in justice to myself, to publish the following true statement:

Captain F. H. ANDERSON, and Lieutenant LUKE GILLEM, quartermaster of Colonel FARRAR's Regiment, employed one JOE JOHNSTON as a Corporal Guard to arrest JOE WHEELER and bring him to camp, or, if he resisted, to kill him, which they did, and JOE JOHNSTON cut off one of his ears. This was done without my knowledge or orders, by Captain ANDERSON and LUKE GILLEM, officers of GARRARD's Regiment. I knew nothing of the affair until after it was done. This ANDERSON and GILLEM will testify to be true. Respectfully,

W. R. STOKES.

VIRGINIA POLITICS.

The Proposed Reunion of the Republicans—Reply of Mr. Gilmer.

The Chairman of the Walker Republican Executive Committee of Virginia, has sent the following reply to the letter from the Chairman of the Wells Committee, proposing a union of two wings of the Republican Party in that State:

ROOMS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
TRUE REPUBLICAN PARTY,
RICHMOND, July 27, 1869.

To Colonel John W. Jeakins, Chairman Wells Republican State Committee:

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 27th inst. is to hand, and I am instructed by my Committee to respond to it in the same frank spirit that characterizes your communication. We fully agree with you that not only that restoration of Virginia to the Union, but her future prosperity and greatness, are dependent upon the cordial enforcement of the Reconstruction acts of Congress, and the declared acts of President GRANT. In enforcing those acts in March last, when we found ourselves compelled by force of circumstances to oppose the policy of the President or withdraw from the Wells Party, we selected the latter as the alternative, and selecting true Republicans as our standard-bearers, we went before the people of the State and invited them to rally upon our platform, based as it was upon a Republican foundation, broad enough for every patriot in the land to stand upon. I need not remind you with what alacrity the intelligent patriotic voters of the State rallied to our call. The results of the 6th of July are too fresh in our memory to need repetition. With a voice almost unanimous the white voters of Virginia indorsed the policy of President GRANT and the acts of Congress relative to reconstruction, thus openly declaring themselves in favor of Republican measures. True, many of these gentlemen had in former times acted with the Secessionists of the South; but are they less Republicans because of their antecedents, and would they have been denied admittance into the Wells party had they sought admission? We think not. You invite a coalition of the two wings of the Republican Party. We cannot admit that the party is divided. On the contrary, we claim that the Grant-Walker party is the National Republican party of Virginia, representing the policy of the President and of Congress, and as such have no divisions to heal. True, a majority of the colored people, under the misdirection of the Wells leaders, voted against the policy of President GRANT; but their eyes have been opened to their mistake, and they are now flocking by hundreds to the Grant-Walker standard. To the late Wells party we have only to say, we shall gladly welcome them to our ranks, for we are unwilling to deprive any class of citizens of the innumerable blessings that must flow to Virginia from an unequivocal enforcement of the national principles of which President GRANT and the Congress of the United States are the head and front. Respectfully yours,

C. K. GILMER,
Chairman True Republican Executive Committee.

Virginia's Position and Promises.

From the Richmond Whig, July 27.

If Congress, the President and General CANBY will but deal with us fairly and squarely, and accept and consummate our well-meant work, the people of Virginia will soon be in a situation to make their great Commonwealth not only one of the political pillars of the Union, but one of its chief financial props and social ornaments. As soon as our political affairs are settled on a permanent basis, a load will be taken off our minds, and shackles will be removed from our energies. We will all go to work with such cheerfulness as we have not known since 1861. We will feel that what we work for and accumulate will not be liable to be swept from us by those who have no property, pay no taxes and live by plunder. We will feel that our works of improvement, on which much money has been expended, will be safe from spoliation, and that our institutions of learning will be rescued from ruin. We will feel that we are once more free, and will put forth all of the energies of freemen. Our old reverence for the Union and the flag will return, and our hearts and our homes will be open to strangers as the peers of our own State. Men with chains around them are galled, and do not feel like singing psalms to those who imposed them. Much has been said about "social ostracism" of Northern men and Federal officers. Let your political ostracism chains and bayonets be soon our most complained of "social ostracism" will also cease. A high-minded people will do spontaneously what years of attempted coercion would never accomplish. Give us reconstruction upon the basis of our election, and you will soon see how nobly Virginia will vindicate herself. She will blot out the painful past and prepare to enter upon a career of political peace, social improvement, educational development and industrial progress that will make her an example to all her sister States. Do her justice, and she will repay you a thousand fold.

General Robert E. Lee's Political Views.

Referring to the report that Governor-elect WALKER, of Virginia, had invited General LEE to attend a conference on political matters, the Lynchburg Virginian says:

"We can assure our contemporary that there is no danger that General LEE will do a foolish act. He is no politician, and has no idea, we believe, of embarking upon such a stormy and unwelcome sea. That he is sincerely devoted to the interests of Virginia, no man can doubt. That he desires reconstruction and would advise his people to put themselves into practical relations with the Federal, or as it is now called, the National Government, we have every reason to believe. But he will not enter into any conclave of politicians. The people would not desire it, even if General LEE were willing to compromise his present position to gratify that wish. It is proper to add, in this connection, that there is no reason to believe that such a meeting as that referred to was ever suggested—perhaps not thought of—by Governor WALKER."

A Short Letter from Henry A. Wise.

The following letter from Ex-Governor HENRY A. WISE is published in the Mobile Register:

RICHMOND, July 7, 1869.

MY DEAR FRIEND: While at the point of death I received yours of April 18. I have barely taken up my bed, but can't walk well; your note brought up old remembrances and reminiscences testifying with the affections of old times. Great God, I thank Thee! I praise Thee that I have not been subdued to consent to lose and part with my liberty, though it is gone, and I now rouse myself to inform you that yesterday the white men roused themselves up and shook off negro and scalawag domination. Richmond and Henrico, and the State all over, have carried a rebuke to black innovation by tens of thousands.

Yours, HENRY A. WISE.

MISSISSIPPI POLITICS.

A Denial from Rev. James Lynch—He is Still in Accord with the Republican Party.

To the Editor of the Washington Chronicle:

Notwithstanding my denial of the statement that I had not pledged myself to Judge DENT as candidate for Governor of Mississippi, persons persist in repeating it. I believe the political salvation of my race for many decades to come depends on the success and perpetuity of the Republican Party of the nation. To secure this I have worked, and shall so continue, with an earnestness as deep as my own soul. To doubt this is to slander me. That I have an earnest desire to secure element of the hitherto governing class incorporated into the Republican Party of Mississippi, to secure for it that confidence and sympathy which will prolong its existence and reconcile to each other both races—that I favor such a policy as will make it the interest of the Southern people to ally themselves with the Republican Party, and secure to the colored citizen, despite prejudice against color, all of the benefits which flow from his enfranchisement—certainly can be no offense of a Republican from the Republican Party. Nor can the mere expression of such opinion, in the way I do, by any possibility, at this day may style themselves the Republican Party.

As a Republican, I particularly desire in our State that we should bring to the great work of reconstruction an amount of wisdom, patriotism and patriotism that shall make it a glorious success.

So fully appreciative are the colored people of the benefits which they have derived from the Republican Party of this nation, that no circumstance, however strong, appealing to hope or fear, can induce desertion from it.

JAMES LYNCH,
Member Mississippi State Central Republican Committee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27, 1869.

NEW-JERSEY POLITICS.

The Contest for the United States Senatorship.

From the Newark Advertiser, July 31.

The next Senator from New-Jersey to succeed Mr. CATTELL will be elected by the Legislature to be chosen in the Fall of 1870, and already the Democratic politicians are marking out the spoils. Governor RANDOLPH and Ex-Governor PARKER are prominently named by their respective friends, while Congressman HAIGHT, Mr. PERET and General HUNTON have their supporters. Governor RANDOLPH does not appear to be very acceptable to some portions of the Democracy. The Bergen County Democrat, edited by Mr. WINTON, a member of the last Legislature, in speaking of the statement that Congressman HAIGHT, of New-Jersey, is likely to succeed Governor RANDOLPH, when the latter goes to the Senate, says: "If Congressman HAIGHT's chances of the Gubernatorial chair are not better than Governor RANDOLPH's for the United States Senate, we think Congressman HAIGHT's chances decidedly below the average." Evidently the Governor does not suit Mr. WINTON.

Ex-Governor PARKER in turn also has opponents in his own party. In Monmouth County a lively contest is making for the State Senatorship, as it is understood that Mr. LITTLE is not in his favor. The Monmouth Inquirer says: "It is well known that the relations between the Senator (Mr. HENRY S. LITTLE) and Ex-Governor have not been the most cordial since the time LITTLE did not favor PARKER for the United States Senatorship. Judging from the signs, we begin to hope they will send a man to succeed CATTELL, for whom our next Senator will have a vote, of course it would be pleasanter for the Ex-Governor's friends that it should not be Senator LITTLE, for he might have preferences for some other gentleman (say Governor RANDOLPH) rather than Ex-Governor PARKER."

In the meantime the Republicans are quietly at work, with the expectation of reflecting Mr. CATTELL or some other good Republican in 1871.

Temperance and Politics in Massachusetts.

From the Boston Transcript, July 28.

There never was a more favorable opportunity, with national questions held in abeyance, for the trial of local issues. Both the prohibitionists and those favorable to judicious legislation agree on this point. The former are determined to insist on committing the Republican Party to their peculiar views, while the latter are equally bent on inserting a liberal plank into the platform of the next Republican State Convention. Judging from the current of public opinion as it now seems to be running, the latter would be the wisest course for the Republicans, in a party sense, as well as the best policy in respect to the promotion of temperance. The coming election must witness the death of prohibitory legislation, in order that statutes based on some degree of common sense may be adopted. It is high time to stamp out the idea that laws may be enacted without the slightest intention of faithfully enforcing them, or solely with the purpose of bringing them to bear against the weak and unprotected. Law is perverted by such administration from all equity and use, and becomes an instrument of oppression in the hands of fanatics or those who have not the poor defence of honest intention for their misdeeds. The Republican organization in Massachusetts cannot afford much longer to carry the odium now attaching to it because of the acts of just this class of men. They must be thrown off and outside the party, if necessary. There is every incentive for such a step, and almost every sign betokens its success.

The Democratic Party in Illinois.

The Chicago Times publishes in a conspicuous position a long letter by "a progressive Democrat," bewailing the fact that since 1864 the Democratic Party in Illinois not only has not made any gains, but through the crossest mismanagement has not even held its own. The writer says:

"It is the fruit of the policy—or, rather, lack of policy—that has characterized the Irreconcilables of the Democratic Party of this State, who have had for years absolute management of it. The centre of this ring is at Springfield, where defeat after defeat does not seem to have made the slightest impression; where the old beaten path of ante-war Democracy is never departed from; where the fact that a new era in public questions is thrust upon us is not or cannot be recognized; where the eternal negro and the resolutions of '98 are so indelibly impressed upon the brain that all the lessons of Lodi, pouring in upon it for a decade, could not wash them out; where self is considered first—party afterward; where the policy of 'rule or ruin' holds high carnival, and individual aggrandisement is sought at the expense of a waning party."

Political Items.

Kentucky to-day elects a State Treasurer and a Legislature.

Judge WATKINS, an independent Conservative candidate for Congress in the Sixth District of Alabama, has withdrawn.

Ex-Governor HARIS, of Louisiana, will stump Texas in the interest of the Hamilton Party.

An eager aspirant for a seat in the Tennessee Legislature availed himself of the opportunity offered by a circus exhibition in his town, and, vaulting into the ring, made a speech setting forth his claims to the position. After he retired, the clown informed him "in a most serious manner."

The Richmond Staff Journal says, upon sufficient authority, that there is no truth in the Washington gossip, imputing to General SHERMAN and the President a desire to place General CANBY in command in Mississippi. But, it adds, there is ground for the statement that certain Virginia politicians are anxious, for personal and party purposes, to substitute in the military command of this State some Copperhead officer in the stead of General CANBY.

HON. HORACE GREELEY addressed the people of Lynchburg, Va., on Thursday night. He said that, in his opinion, WALKER's platform embodied the only true grounds of reconstruction. Congress, in adopting the reconstruction policy, advocated the protection of the interests and rights of all classes. He dwelt upon the great material resources of Virginia—especially its unparalleled supplies of coal and iron, and its productive soil, and urged the young men of the State to remain in the State. He was not very sanguine regarding coolie labor, and said that he thought labor was cheap enough now.

Prolific Cotton in Georgia.

From the Savannah Republican, July 31.

We have had sent to us, and have now on exhibition in our counting-room, two stalks of cotton, one of the variety called "Boyd's Prolific," grown by A. P. WRIGHT, of Thomasville, Ga., and combining all the forms; the seed, and is, of the variety known as "Dickson's Select," was grown by R. H. HARDAWAY, of Thomasville, and contains 372 bolls and forms. A letter received with them states that these stalks are considered fair specimens of the best fields in Thomas County. For their size they are certainly extraordinary. The seed were planted on the 15th of April, and of course ample time remained for greater development of both stalk and fruit. The crop in that section of the State is said to be superb, and should no disaster happen to it, will equal that of previous years. But it will not do to judge too confidently the coming crop by present appearances. The season for disasters to cotton is yet ahead. An army of caterpillars may cut it off two-thirds in a night—and they have already appeared in many districts—or a storm, or wet Fall, a small and indifferent force at picking season, together with other interruptions, may seriously change the result.

Rains in Southwestern Georgia—Corn and Cotton.

From the Macon Telegraph, July 31.

The best rains of the season fell throughout Southern and Southwestern Georgia, and Southeastern Alabama, on Saturday night and Sunday forenoon last. At Eufaula the rain began to fall at 4 o'clock P. M., and several light showers fell during the night; but on Sunday morning about daylight the clouds assumed a settled appearance and steady rain set in which continued about two hours, when it cleared off. We have had "Dry Times" for four months, and the parched earth seemed to drink every drop as it fell. These rains will amply do for the early corn, and one or more showers will save what corn there is to save. We noticed along the southwestern road that most of the cotton fields were so much stripped, and in very full of a worse pest than ever before seen in small, as a general thing, but the late rains will bring it out wonderfully. Several planters with whom we conversed said that the rains of Friday and Sunday last were the most timely and abundant that ever fell in this State.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

Our Paris correspondent writes that Mr. RENÉ GIRONOUX, one of our foremost New-York artists, is at present in that city, making preparations for a protracted residence there. He does not intend to be idle, but purposes to be a constant contributor to the Paris exhibitions.

Mr. KROMELBEIN is making the tour of Germany. His purchases of works of art are very extensive, as he looks for a lively reaction in art matters on this side of the water this Fall.

Messrs. J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Philadelphia, have ready the first five parts of their Universal Pronouncing Dictionary of Biography and Mythology, by Dr. J. THOMAS, the learned editor of Lippincott's Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World. Such a work of reference is greatly needed, and its issue will be warmly welcomed both by scholars and by general readers.

Mr. KNIGHT, agent of the Anglo-American Times, (published in London,) is now in this country to promote the interests of that journal. It is an international weekly newspaper of 24 pages, devoted chiefly to the discussion of international subjects, and whatever tends to promote friendly feeling between the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, and is an earnest and intelligent advocate of American rights. Established for about four years, it has already done much to remove error and promote the mutual interests of the two countries, by circulating correct information of American affairs, both in Great Britain and on the Continent of Europe. Such a paper ought to be encouraged and supported by the friends of both countries, and we shall be glad to hear that Mr. KNIGHT is meeting with success.

Miss LAURA C. REDDEN (Howard Glyndon) has prepared a volume of poems for the press, which will be given to the public some time this Fall. It will comprise her poems that have recently appeared in the magazines, and many that have never been published.

Rev. E. D. G. PRIME, one of the editors of the New-York Observer, will start to-morrow on a journey round the world, going by way of San Francisco, Japan, China, India, the Holy Land and Europe. He intends to do all this within a year. He would better take five years for it, or make his journey shorter.

Shortly after Mr. BRADY's death a committee of the Law Institute passed a resolution that a bust of him should be placed in the Law Library, and the sum of $2,500 was raised for that purpose. The commission was given to Mr. WILSON MAC DONALD. The model is now complete, and the sculptor is anxious that the friends of the deceased should call and see it at his rooms, corner of Fourth-street and Broadway.

THE COOLIE TRADE.

Letter from Secretary Boutwell to the Collector of New-Orleans.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 23, 1869.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 26th ult., covering a communication of Mr. WM. CREWYT, dated the 26th ult., relative to the importation of coolies into this country, and asking for instructions of the Department.

I reply that Mr. CREWYT is in error in stating that the act of 19th February, 1862, prohibiting American citizens from engaging in the coolie trade has been abrogated.

On the 16th January, 1867, a resolution was passed unanimously by both Houses of Congress, expressing the abhorrence of the people of the United States for the coolie trade, and in consonancy with this resolution Mr. Secretary McCULLOCH addressed to the Collector of your port the letter of the 19th August, 1867, of which a copy is inclosed.

Additional article 6 of the treaty between the United States and the Ta-Tsing Empire, concluded at Washington on the 28th July last, and which now awaits the action of the Emperor of China, contains no provision for any voluntary emigration, and agrees to make it a penal offence to take Chinese subjects from China without their free and voluntary consent.

The Department of State, by circular of 17th January, 1867, addressed to Ministers and Consuls of the United States, directs that the Consul at every port where coolies may embark, be required to certify, after full examination, that such embarkation is not forced or procured by fraud, but is voluntary, and requires that such Ministers and Consuls use all the authority, power and influence of their respective commands toward preventing and discouraging the carrying out of the traffic referred to, in any way.

Such being the facts in the case, you are hereby authorized and directed to use all vigilance in the suppression of this new modification of the slave trade. Very respectfully,

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of Treasury.

Collector of Customs, New-Orleans, La.

SECRETARY McCULLOCH'S LETTER.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Aug. 19, 1867.

SIR: Information having been given to the Department concerning an alleged trade in coolies between foreign ports and this country, contravening the laws of the United States, and apprehension being entertained that the acts of this nature are in contemplation and may be committed, you are hereby instructed to inquire vigilantly into the circumstances of all cases where there is reason to suspect any such violations of law and to report them at once to this Department and also to cause the facts to be brought to the notice of the proper United States Attorneys.

Please acknowledge the receipt of these instructions. Very respectfully,

E. MCCULLOCH,
Secretary of Treasury.

WM. P. KELLOGG, Esq., Collector of Customs, New-Orleans, La.

TEMPERANCE.

The Meeting of the Ohio State Alliance—Separate Political Action Condemned.

Correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial.

URBANA, Ohio, Friday, July 30, 1869.

The State Temperance Alliance is composed of the best temperance workers in the State. It was organized to meet the generally-felt want of union and cooperation among men of all faiths, creeds and societies who desired to promote the cause of total abstinence, to enforce the anti-liquor laws of the State, and to educate the popular mind in favor of these objects. Several attempts had been made without success, in this direction, before the formation of the Alliance was undertaken, less than a year ago. The most casual observer could not fail to notice in the meeting he has had during the present week, indications of decided progress in the work since the meetings of State Conventions at Newark and Columbus. The delegates in attendance were, as a class, men of thought and weight of action. The number present was larger than at previous meeting of the kind held in this State for some years, except, perhaps, one held at Columbus, when the Alliance was organized. Deep earnestness was visible on the faces of speakers and hearers, yet the fanaticism that can only be satisfied with the utterance of extreme sentiments, or the unusual action of an extreme policy, was not tolerated. It was plain from the outset that the Convention was overwhelmingly opposed to throwing the temperance reform as a football to parties in the political arena. A faction of fanatics who make Neal Dow their idol, and advocate Dow for a projected new political temperance party, had made separate nominations for State officers. It was felt by the members of the Alliance that unless the action of this faction were disavowed, the cause of temperance would have received a severe wound in the house of its friends.

The candidate for Lieutenant-Governor was here to give the weight of his considerable influence to the movement, and one or two other men whose devotion to the cause of temperance was well known, sympathized with his views. With questionable taste, a letter from a neighboring State entered the lists on behalf of separate political action. Yet in spite of all these efforts and influences, the Convention, refusing all subterfuges and shunning all evasions, published squarely on the record in favor of the resolution reported by the Committee in favor of setting aside the existing political organizations, and against the nominations of separate temperance tickets.

No lack of earnestness in the cause is to be inferred from this action. The Alliance voted unanimously to raise, in the several counties of the State, the sum of $30,000 for the work, and the Executive Committee was increased to one for each Congressional District, and chosen for the State at large, with authority to set agents at work in all the counties of the State.

The Ohio Liquor law, which received merciless criticism at the hands of that class who appear to imagine that a law is worth nothing unless it executes itself, was treated with great fairness. The material fact developed by the discussion was, that in localities where public sentiment demands the law, its faithful execution is secured and its objects are successfully obtained. Dr. LEES, of England, was emphatic in his commendation of our State law, and Hon. NEAL DOW was unqualified in the expression of his opinion that it was the best statute for the temperance cause of any state in the Union, and seemed the wisest enforcement of this law, meaning, in the meantime, to so educate public sentiment as to create a demand for a prohibitory law.

THE LAW COURTS.

The Summer Vacation of Judges and Other Officers.

What Courts Will Be in Session and for Whose Relief During the August Term—Whereabouts of Judges and Lawyers.

The August Term of the Law Courts commences to-day, but, like the July Term, there will be little doing beyond the ordinary Chambers business. All the civil Courts, with the exception of the Marine and Justices' Courts, have a vacation from the 1st of July till the 1st of October, during which time all jury trials and Special Term business are suspended. The Judges who are to hold Chambers in the various Courts during this month are as follows:

SUPREME COURT.—Judge BARNARD.

SUPERIOR COURT—Judge FREEMAN.—Judge FREEDMAN, of this Court, will also remain in town during the whole term, for the transaction of any Chamber business that may be brought before him. The General Term of this Court will also open on Wednesday of this week, and will be held by Chief Justice BARGOUR and Judge FREEMAN, but it is not expected that any business will be transacted beyond the announcement of decisions in cases argued at previous terms.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—Judge DALY.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.—Judge BLATCHFORD, of this Court, will be in town to hold Chambers on the 5th, 6th, and 7th, (Thursday, Friday, and Saturday,) of this week.

The COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER will open to-day, Judge CARDOZO presiding, but the District-Attorney does not intend to bring any cases on for trial before the Court at this term.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.—This Court will also open to-day before Recorder HACKETT. There are no important cases ready for trial, and the Court will only sit three or four days.

MARINE COURT.—This Court is obliged by law to hold sessions for jury trials every month in the year. The present term will be held by Judge CURTIS, but will probably remain in session only a few days.

WHEREABOUTS OF THE BENCH AND BAR.

Judges and lawyers, like other people, are expected to take a little leisure during their Summer vacation, and those who are fashionably inclined and can afford it may even venture a tour of the watering places. As for the Judges, their salaries, as a general thing, do not admit of a very extensive or expensive Summer frolic, though it is to be hoped there are few of them who are reduced to the necessity of living on the charity of their better halves, as a distinguished Judge of the Supreme Court recently declared to the Grand Jury was his forlorn predicament. And then there are lawyers, with large practice and ample means for travel, who prefer to remain in the City through all the hot Summer months—crusty old bachelors many of them, whose admiration of the fair sex is so exuberant that they dare not trust themselves to the fascinations of Saratoga, Long Branch, or Newport. But the majority contrive to get away from the City for a shorter or longer time during the vacation of the Courts, and they distribute themselves here and there, as their tastes or inclinations may dictate. At the present time they are scattered around at nearly all the noted Summer resorts, and a good share of them are expected to bring up at Saratoga to witness the races that commence on Wednesday next.

Of the Supreme Court Judges, SUTHERLAND is at St. Catherine's, Canada East; CLERKE is at Saratoga, INGRAHAM has been at Niagara Falls and will visit Saratoga on his return; BARNARD has been at Long Branch and will visit the Falls during the month, and CARDOZO confines himself to an occasional run down to Long Branch.

Of the Superior Court Bench, Chief Justice BARGOUR has been making a tour of the New-England States, visiting the manufacturing districts; Judge MONELL is going to the White Mountains, and during his absence will visit Montreal, Quebec and the Saguenay River; Judge MCCUNN spends his leisure time at his new country seat in Hempstead, Long Island; Judge DAVIES is at Long Branch, as is also the Clerk of the Court, JAS. M. SWEENEY.

Judge DALY, of the Common Pleas, has made the tour of Canada, and at last accounts was in Salem, Mass. He will be in the City during the present week, but will not open his Chambers in July, is going to spend his vacation at Rockaway and Long Branch. Judge BARRETT is making the tour of Europe.

Judge BLATCHFORD, of the United States District Court, is at Newport. Judge HUNTER, of the Circuit Court, is at his home in Cooperstown. He has recovered from his recent severe illness, and will be in town at the September session of the Court, when it is expected that the long-delayed trial of the United States ex rel. WM. FULLERTON will take place before him.

Recorder HACKETT, of the Court of Sessions, has been spending some time in the seaside shores of Long Island, and, after finishing up the business of his Court for the present term, is going to Long Branch; Judge BENEDICT has been to Long Branch and is going to Saratoga; District-Attorney GARVIN proposes to spend his vacation at Long Branch; Assistant District-Attorney HUTCHINGS is at Lake George; Mr. VANDERVOORT, the old-time popular Clerk of the Court, is going to Niagara.

Among the more prominent members of the Bar, Messrs. ELIJAH PRODRICK, JNO. E. BURRILL, LAWRENCE SEWARD and JNO. E. PARSONS are making the tour of Europe. WM. M. EVARTS is at his country seat beneath the shadow of Ascutney Mountain, Windsor, Vt.; Ex-Judge BOSWORTH has been at Sharon Springs; CHAS. O'CONOR spends his time between Washington Heights and Lake George; D. D. FIELD is at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire Hills and the Catskill Mountains; United States District-Attorney PIERREPONT is at his country seat on the Hudson, opposite West Point; JNO. MCKEON is at Long Branch; E. C. BENEDICT is at home in the White Mountains; Judge REYNOLDS, of Brooklyn, is in Europe, and Judge BENEDICT, of the United States Circuit Court, Eastern District, is among the Green Mountains.

THE TAILORS' STRIKE.

Mass Meeting at Germania Hall—Resolutions in Favor of Adhering to the Action Already Taken.

The members of the various Journeymen Tailors' and Clothing Cutters' Unions of this City assembled en masse at the Germania Rooms, Bowery, yesterday afternoon. The attendance was variously estimated at from 500 to 800 persons. Mr. HENRY LUCKEN, Acting President of the National Labor Union, presided. Messrs. E. STEBER and WM. LUCKEN were Secretaries.

Mr. LUCKEN announced that about six years ago the shop tailors of this City and vicinity commenced to organize with a view to securing an increase of wages. In March last they applied to their employers, who refused them an advance. A few days ago the Executive Committee of the Union decided to place the men on a strike, which was accordingly done on Wednesday last. He said that the present pay of the trade was outrageously low, being vastly below the pay of any other kind of skilled labor in the country. He said that the strike had been inaugurated in order to remedy the present evil from which the workers were suffering.

Resolutions of respect to the memory of the late WILLIAM H. SYLVIS, President of the National Labor Union, were subsequently adopted.

The following preamble and resolutions concerning the strike were then adopted:

Whereas, We, the members of the Wholesale department, in making our just and not extravagant demands, have been treated with the utmost contempt by our employers; and

Whereas, We have proved that the necessity has driven us to a strike, inasmuch as the stubbornness of our employers has refused to accede the means of proved a sensible adjustment of our difficulties, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the clothing cutters, coatmakers and shop tailors employ all the means in our power to carry out the strike.

Resolved, That we take care no more work, and that we return what we have on hand.

Resolved, That we call on all manufacturers, not at present affected by the strike, to follow the example of their colleagues in New-York and Newark, and immediately stop work.

Mr. MARSHALL, President of the Journeymen Tailors' Union, was introduced and said that the time had gone by when the tailors could expect to get anything by simply pleading and imploring their employers for an advance in wages. These men would not ask whether their employers were or were not receiving living wages, for the reason that they did not care. Their only concern was to grind the men to the earth, and give them the least possible pay for the greatest amount of work. He claimed that the only resource left to the tailors was to strike and force the employers to accede to the demand of their help.

Mr. BRANE, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Union, spoke against the members of the trade who had heretofore tamely submitted to the tyranny of the employers. He was very severe on the manufacturers, claiming that if they would join with the tailors the object of the strike would be virtually accomplished. Addresses were also made by HENRY SHAFFER, President of the Clothing Cutters' Union, Mr. RAITZ, Mr. STONE and others. The meeting then adjourned.

NEW-JERSEY SOLDIERS.

A Communication Addressed to them from Governor Ward—Unclaimed Valuables and Memorandums in his Possession.

Ex-Governor WARD, of New-Jersey, has accumulated many valuables belonging to soldiers of the late war, for which he can find no owners. There are [illegible] suits of money, some discharge papers, final statements, &c., and many mementoes, left by dying soldiers to be sent to their friends now in his possession. There seems to be no way to communicate with the owners of this property, except by public notice of its whereabouts. Those named below, are requested to address, by letter only, MARCUS L. WARD, Room No. 2, Post Office building, Newark, N. J.

THE OCEAN BANK ROBBERY.

The Story Told by Blake, the Detective, Arrested in Portland.

From the Portland (Me.) Argus, July 31.

Our readers will remember the startling announcement in June last that the Ocean Bank of New-York, situated on Greenwich-street, had been robbed of nearly all the contents of the vaults—about $2,000,000—and there was no clue to the perpetrators of the bold scheme. Detectives have since been at work on the case, but no positive developments had up to recently been found to give any clue to the money. Detectives, it is said, traced two of the conspirators East, and have made a pretty thorough search. On Thursday, BLAKE, the detective who so successfully worked up the Adams express robbery last Winter, while pursuing the old adage, "set a rogue to catch a rogue," was arrested.

BLAKE is of medium size, rather thick set, black hair, cold, gray, quick eye, wears a full beard, rather in its color looking as if it belonged to a man on the shady side of fifty, and therefore he rightly claims it; his features are not the finest, and his nose would indicate that he was built at least part of the time. With the shrewdness of one in his position his dress is neither of the best material nor the neatest fit, but he does not appear to be a very fastidious person.

His story is simple and pretty concise in regard to the memorable robbery, and with his clear intellect he perhaps wishes to take advantage of his peculiar lonely position to once more appear in the world. He says he passed through this city on the 9th of June on his way to New-York to join his pals, and after the robbery was committed he left the next week to return to Portland. He says the party numbered four or five that hired the basement under the bank, and pretended to be insurance agents from Ohio. On the morning above mentioned, the features of the banking-room being familiar to the occupants below, an entrance to the same was made by boring with an auger through the intervening floor. Once within reach of the vault it seems that it was an easy matter for the professionals to pick the lock, it not being one of the safest, as was afterward established. The small safes within were easily blown open with out attracting the attention of the night watch, and their contents rifled. In their hurry they did not get a lot of gold, $20,000, and gold-bearing bonds to about the same value.

After they got well clear of the building they found they had with them $600,000 in certified checks and railroad bonds that were of no use to them, so they sacrificed a trunk they had, and left them in the trunk on Elizabeth-street, where it was recovered.

He does not speak of the routes taken by the several confederates, or where they are, but thinks they are still in the country.

He appears not to feel very anxious about himself, and says that all will go right with him, and the money he has will find its owners all right, and volunteers to say that none of the present holders will be able to use the unlawful gains. Offices are coming to make his acquaintance.

This story is good for what it is worth. The charge on which BLAKE was arrested by Deputies PERRY and BOLTON is for the larceny of between $600 and $800 from the proprietors of the Arlington House, Arlington, Mass. The facts in this latter case, we learn, are that BLAKE and his son were left in charge of the hotel, and he absconded with the money.

Fatal Accident in Auburn—Death of Milton Alden.

From the Auburn Advertiser, July 30.

Mr. MILTON ALDEN, one of our oldest and most respected citizens, was instantly killed at about 1:30 o'clock to-day. He was engaged in adjusting the belt to a pulley on the shafting at his shop on the outlet, in rear of Mechanic-street, for the purpose of running a circular saw—the shaft making 300 revolutions per minute. It is supposed his clothing came in contact with the belt in such a manner that he was drawn up to the ceiling, with a rapidity and force sufficient to break his neck instantly, also fracturing the bones of his legs and arms, and frightfully mangling his body. Nearly two minutes elapsed before the gates could be shut down and the machinery stopped, when his body was removed to the floor above, where a horrified crowd assembled to gaze upon the ghastly spectacle.

A Coroner's jury, impaneled immediately after the accident, find their verdict as follows: "That the said MILTON ALDEN came to his death on the 30th instant by accidentally falling into a belt suddenly drawn around a shaft in his shop on Mechanic-street."

For some twenty years the deceased had been an honored citizen of Auburn, industriously engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, and more recently known as of the firm of ALLEN & SON, in the Auburn Agricultural Works. The suddenness of his death, and the estimable character of the unfortunate man, give to the tragic circumstance a degree of saddened horror which will very generally pervade the community upon reading of his fate.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The market continues very dull and quiet. There was but little excitement last week, and except on Tuesday, nothing of any note is promised for this. The auctioneers have very wisely postponed other sales until September, when easier weather will make them more popular.

The market needs a rest. For several months it has been run steadily. Even Mondays and Saturdays, in old times recognized as off days, have been pressed into the service, an immense amount of property has been disposed of, and the season has generally been very successful; but it is time now to stop for a while, the demand is for the present supplied, the people are losing interest, and to continue selling through this month would seriously affect the Fall season. For some weeks past the excitement has been diminishing, and at one or two of the sales made lately, the entire absence of any enthusiasm was painfully apparent. The assemblages have been, too, of a very different character from those of a couple of months ago. Then, interested, intelligent and attentive crowds gathered about the auctioneer, listened carefully to what he had to say, bid briskly and bought promptly. Now, the parties are mainly mere circumstants, who go for what they can get to eat and drink, to have a free ride and a good time generally, and it has not been an uncommon thing to see the crowd separate as soon as the lunch table had been cleared, leaving the auctioneer almost alone, standing in the midst of a little knot of persons, who were, perhaps, willing to invest a bribe, if the lots sold very cheap, otherwise not, while the main crowd were off pleasure hunting, and not seen again until they met the legitimate visitors at the place appointed to take the return train. This is of course very unjust to the owner, but large crowds care very little for the purses or feelings of individuals, and until a change is made in the class of persons who attend, until more responsible men are seen among them again and fewer lunch hunters, known to the auctioneers as "revolvers" and "repeaters," but little else can be expected.

The sale to be made on Tuesday, 3d inst., by Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, JR., & BRO., deserves particular attention for two reasons; first, because it will probably be the last chance this month the people will have to purchase out-of-town lots in this manner, and secondly, because the property itself is very beautiful and desirable. Everybody of course knows of Orange. When all the rest of New-Jersey was comparatively unknown to the people of New-York, before the now well-known lines of the Central and Northern New-Jersey Railroads had been opened and talked of, the country about the slopes of the Orange Mountain was the favorite place of residence for business men. Orange, in the minds of City people, was scarcely thought to be in New-Jersey; it was almost considered as part of the suburbs of New-York; the people were all from New-York, its institutions were all New-York, and its society was made up entirely by people from the great City; certainly, no place in New-Jersey has been longer or more favorably known as a place of residence, and it is well deserving the high place it holds in public esteem. The sale of the 3d inst. is really two sales, as it is in two localities of Orange, and is two descriptions of property. The first sale will take place within five minutes' walk of Orange Valley and Montrose Stations in Orange. The train, leaving New-York at 10:30 A. M., from the foot of Barclay-street, runs directly (stopping at Newark) to this property, where a collation will be in readiness. There are at this point seventy-three villa plots to be sold, beautifully situated in the lovely Orange Valley, just at the base of the far-famed Orange Mountain, and fronting on Scotland and other streets, just south of Tremont-avenue. The improvements in this locality are of the most elegant description. After these lots are disposed of, the train will run down to Brick Church Station, where thirty-three lots will be sold, situated four minutes' walk from station, fronting on Prospect, William, Lincoln, and other streets, and surrounded by the very best improvements in Orange. These lots are in the very heart of the city, with houses on every side, the horse cars to Newark running past the corner of Prospect-street, only three minutes' walk away. Prospect-street is flagged and beautifully shaded. Brick Church is but twelve miles from New-York, with communication by the Morris and Essex Railroad, twelve trains each way daily, and by the horse cars to Newark at all hours of the day and late in the evening. The terms are very favorable, and special care has been taken by the auctioneers to provide for the comfort of their guests. All who are really interested in this sale may obtain tickets at the auctioneers' office, No. 35 Pine-street.

The same day Messrs. PHELPS, FALLON & CO. will sell at their office, No. 135 Broadway, at 12 o'clock, the valuable property known as Shooters' Island, nine miles from New-York, and opposite Newark Bay, containing nine acres, with dock one hundred feet long, and sufficient water for vessels of all class, with six substantial brick buildings in good order, the whole constituting a complete refinery, or well suited for any manufacturing business. Terms and full particulars at office of auctioneers.

FINANCIAL.

SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD

FIRST MORTGAGE

CONVERTIBLE BONDS

OF THE

Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company,

OF ILLINOIS,

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD AT THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, NEW-YORK. COUPONS PAYABLE APRIL AND OCTOBER.

FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

The Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad, upon whose property these bonds are issued, is now in process of completion, and will shortly be the direct line of Danville and Pekin, both in Illinois. The length of the road is 117 5-10 miles, its capital stock $1,000,000. The grading, bridging, and all the work necessary to perfect a complete roadway has been already done, and the whole line is ready for the rails. These are rapidly being put down, and a portion of the road is now in successful operation. It is expected that the whole road will be completed early the coming autumn.

These bonds are convertible into stock at par at the option of the holder, and may be registered in the name of the owner at any time if desired. The total amount of bonds is limited to $3,000,000. The security offered is, as we shall show, the very best. Already some nearly equal to the total amount of the bonds to be issued have been expended on the road. The bonds, averaging less than $10,000 per mile, are secured by a first mortgage on the whole road and entire property of the Company. The road runs east and west, on the line of the principal and oldest emigrant roads used in the State, passing through several populous towns and cities, and the richest agricultural district in Illinois—in a word, through the garden of the Garden State. Its local business alone will suffice to make it a first-class paying road, while, with its connections with many principal lines, its through trade must be such as to make it one of the leading roads in the country.

The road will be consolidated with the line from Danville to Indianapolis, making a line of 240 miles. At Indianapolis connection will be made with all the through lines to Pittsburgh, Baltimore and Philadelphia, and the Toledo, Wabash and Western. In fact, the road will form a main link in the direct communication of the principal Atlantic cities with southern Illinois, Southern Iowa, Burlington, Iowa, and thence with Omaha and the Pacific.

It will complete a direct line from Boston to Peoria, Keokuk, Burlington, Omaha and the far West, via Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland and the Bellefontaine Railroad to Indianapolis and Danville, or via Toledo and Wabash and Western Roads.

It will form the most direct line from New-York to the same points West via the New-York Central, Lake Shore and Bellefontaine Roads, to Indianapolis and Danville; or via the Erie, Atlantic and Great Western to Dayton, Ohio; and via Indiana Central, to Indianapolis, Danville, Bloomington, &c., as well as from Philadelphia via the Pennsylvania Central to Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Dayton and Indianapolis.

It will form an important link in the communication of Baltimore and the South with the Great West, the shortest and most direct route from Baltimore and the Ohio Railroad, to Parkersburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Danville and Peoria.

Thus, with the combined advantages of a certainty of a remunerative local business, and a through business, which, as a connecting link to so many diverging and principal lines, it must necessarily have, it is reasonable to presume that the earnings of this road must exceed, in proportion to its length, those of any other railroad in Illinois. The following table shows the earnings of some of the principal railroads in Illinois:

Railroads.	Miles road.	Earnings per mile.
Chicago, Alton and St. Louis	290	$12,000
Chicago and Northwestern	1,115	11,000
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific	615	10,000
Toledo, Wabash and Western	321	7,261
Illinois Central	705	10,116

It is safe to estimate the receipts of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad for the first year at $12,000 per mile, or on 117.50 miles, $1,404,000.

FIRST YEAR.

Receipts, as estimated	$1,404,000
Estimated expenses
Operating expenses, 50 per cent	$702,000
Interest on $1,000,000 gold bonds, 7 per cent	70,000
Premium, 40 per cent on $500,000 gold	56,000
Set aside as Sinking Fund	10,000— 838,000
Leaving a net profit over interest and expenses	$566,000

Or over 18 per cent. for dividends on the capital stock the first year of its operation. Without doubt, a progressive increase thereafter, each year, would be the result. The geographical position of the road is sufficient to convince all of its great value and usefulness.

The stock of the Rock Island and the Illinois Central, Ohio and Mississippi and Alton Bonding Roads, are all selling at from above par to nearly 200, while none of them are more favorably located, and the competition with either is much greater than this can be. There is no reason why the stock of this road shall not sell as high as either of the above. Hence the privilege of converting these bonds into stock of the Company at par any time desired greatly increases their value.

After having personally and thoroughly examined this road, we accepted the agency for negotiating its bonds. We now offer them at 95 and accrued interest in currency. With the full confidence we recommend them as a reliable and safe security and profitable investment.

At the price they pay 19 per cent. currency—over 6 per cent. more than the same amount invested in Five-twenty Bonds—besides the advantage of being free from tax, and the prospect of a speedy advance in the stock of the road on completion, into which they may be converted.

Government Bonds and Gold received at their market value in exchange without commission. Bonds forwarded by express free of charge.

Full particulars furnished by the undersigned, financial agents of the Company.

RELIGIOUS.

Archbishop McCloskey on the Infallibility of the Ecumenical Council.

Anniversary of West India Emancipation.

Very few of the churches were open yesterday, persons as a rule being at present in the enjoyment of their Summer vacation at the sea-shore or in the mountains.

Archbishop McCloskey preached a somewhat remarkable sermon at the Cathedral on the objects of the coming Ecumenical Council, in which he took the ground that in their action the Council, provided it agreed with the views of the Pope, would be inspired of the Holy Ghost, and that therefore their decision will be infallibly correct.

The anniversary of the emancipation of slavery in the British West Indies was celebrated by the colored people in Zion Church in the evening. In the course of the sermon the pastor declared that General Grant, in his opinion the weakest of all the Presidents, was responsible for the Southern outrages, of which he mentioned instances not recorded in the papers. Reports of these are given below.

THE COUNCIL AT ROME.

Farewell Sermon of Archbishop McCloskey on Its Place and Purposes.

It having been announced that the Most Rev. Archbishop McCloskey would yesterday preach his farewell sermon, previous to taking his departure for Rome, to attend the Ecumenical Council to assemble in that city in December next, the cathedral in Mott-street was at the usual Sunday morning service, filled by an attentive congregation, among whom were many Roman Catholic gentlemen, belonging to Protestant families, who came to listen to the parting words of their Ordinary's prelate. Solemn High Mass was celebrated on the occasion, the celebrant being Very Rev. Dr. Starrs, Vicar-General of the Archdiocese, assisted by Rev. Father McGrath, acting as Deacon, Rev. Dr. McSweeney as Sub-Deacon, and Rev. Father McNierney, Secretary to the Archbishop, as Master of Ceremonies. The musical services were of superior excellence, the mass sung being Schmitz's No. 6, in two sharps, and the offertory selection a quartette, "Jesu, Redemptor Mous." The soloists were: Mme. Choux, soprano; Mrs. Werner, contralto; Henry Schmitz, tenor, and Herr Bohr, basso. Professor Gustavus Schmitz presided at the organ. Previous to the sermon the chorale, "Veni Creator Spiritus" was sung, after which the Archbishop ascended the pulpit and read the gospel selection for the day, taken from St. Mark vii., 31 to 37. Taking as his text the expression used by the multitude on witnessing the miracle narrated in the gospel, "He hath done all things well: He maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak," the Archbishop spoke in substance as follows:

The words of the text inform us what were the feelings of the multitude, how they were filled with wonder and admiration, on seeing the miracle of curing the deaf mute which the divine Saviour wrought in their presence. They saw in this another evidence of the power and beneficence of that divine personage who went about doing good; and so impressed were they by what they had witnessed, that they could not withhold the tribute of their admiration for Him. They viewed his miraculous action, however, in a purely material and human light; they did not know, and could not understand, the deeper and higher meaning that lay beneath the surface of His act; and therefore little understood the appropriateness of their own almost inspired words, when they said, "He hath done all things well: He maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak." Truly, "He hath done all things well." For this He was sent upon the earth; for this he became God incarnate in our humanity; not only to heal the miseries and infirmities of the body, but the still greater and more grievous ills that afflict the soul; not only in His life benefaction shown to us among any one people, or in one country or one age, but it extends over all the world, to every age and every nation. The great work He came on earth to perform He still carries on; that which He left unaccomplished is being perfected; He is still speaking to the nations and to the world. How, in what way, in the Church which He established; through the Sacraments of that Church which are the means whereby grace is conveyed to the soul; through the ministry which He commenced to perform His work. In the Sacraments He is appealing to the material senses of man, and yet working miracles of grace and goodness in men. In Baptism our ears were opened to hear His commands and to obey them. In the Sacrament of Penance we are raised from the depth and degradation of sin to a life of grace. In the Holy Eucharist, under the transmutation of bread, there is given to us a celestial food, a strengthener in combating with the evil tendencies of the world; and in Confirmation, the gifts of the Holy Ghost enable us to secure the immortal crown. What are all these but manifestations of His divine goodness? What are they but miracles wrought for our spiritual welfare? In guiding and directing our spiritual wants, He speaks to us with an ever-living, infallible voice, giving us assurance that we cannot be led astray. If there be those who see not the hidden efficacy of the Sacraments, who refuse to-day the Church, it is no more an argument against the validity of the one nor the authority of the other, than, in the beginning, it was against the miracles wrought by our divine Saviour by those who then would not believe. We are told that miracles would come; that scandals would come; that some would turn aside from the teachings of truth in order to embrace the novelties of the day; but it is nevertheless true that His work is going on, and will be continued to the end of time. It is always true that blessed are the poor, rather than the rich; blessed are the meek, rather than the haughty and the proud; blessed are the peace-makers, rather than the wranglers and those who incite to strife and to war; in a word, it is always true that we must become even as little children if we would be pleasing to God. It is always true that divine faith is unchangeable; that faith cannot bow down to mere human understanding. The history of the Church has shown us incontestible evidences of the fact that God is ever guiding and guarding her actions. When persecution, unrelenting persecution, of every kind, has been raging, and the powers of hell have combined against her, she could certainly say, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." Blessed are ye when you are persecuted for the truth; and when I need not say more, when you are directed so that if it be in my power I may avoid the evils which afflict the Church, and by a kind of instinct I may be enabled to point out the dangers which threaten her, and the evil that may be done which conducted by the question of men. But, beloved brethren, prayer, to be pleasing to God, must be offered up with clean hands and a pure heart. Sin is ever abominable in the sight of the Almighty, and many of the evils with which the Church is afflicted have, perhaps, been permitted, I doubt not, in punishment for the many and grievous sins of her children. In order that you may have an incentive to pray with the proper disposition, so that your supplications may be offered before the throne of God, the Vicar of Christ has opened out to you the spiritual treasures of Heaven. To him was given the authority so to do; he was made the successor by Christ himself, when He said: "I give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven." With these he has unlocked the spiritual treasury, so that, on complying with the conditions of true penitence and sincere sorrow for sin, you may reap more fully of grace and benediction. Another condition is that you, in the giving of your substance to aid the poor, those who are in poverty and sorrow, I command you to be generous in your support to the many noble institutions that Catholic charity has already provided for the poor in your midst. You have need of alms-deeds to wash the transgressions, the prayers of the orphan, the widow, and the afflicted. Let me exhort you to persevere in these noble works of charity which are so greatly a source of calling down the blessings of Heaven on all who aid and encourage them. In this connection I take pleasure in mentioning that another charitable institution is about to be added to the many that your generosity has already provided—I refer to the establishment for the support and education of deaf mutes, which is shortly to be opened here, and to the support of which you will be called upon to give generously. This has a peculiar significance in connection with this day's gospel. Those who are deprived of the sense of hearing, and whose tongues have not been loosened to chant the praises of God, strongly yet meekly appeal to our hearts to provide for them in their necessitous condition. Do not forget, also, the seminary for the education of the priesthood who are to minister to the spiritual wants of your children and those who come after them; nor the new cathedral, wherein are to be celebrated the divine mysteries of religion, and which will go down to future ages as a monument of your zeal and piety. In leaving them you, for a time, to participate in the proceedings of the great Council that is convened by the Father of the Faithful, I take this occasion to thank you for the offerings you have given as an earnest of your love for the worthy Pontiff who presides over the Church. I shall take unbounded pleasure, as well as a degree of honorable pride, in laying them at the feet of Christ's Vicar on earth, as an assurance of that love which you have so generously manifested; and when I kneel to pray before the shrine of the great Apostles Peter and Paul, I shall not forget to supplicate the God of Heaven to bless you in your temporal and spiritual necessities; in your families, and in your relations both with the Church and the world. In return, let me ask your pious prayers, that I may be strengthened to perform all the duties devolving on me as your Bishop and pastor, and, if it be God's holy will, that I may return again, to greet you still in the enjoyment of both spiritual and temporal happiness, which is a blessing I sincerely wish you all.

When the post-communion was read, the Archbishop pronounced the benediction, and at the close of the last gospel, the vast congregation, which was in good part made up of Protestants, retired from the sacred edifice.

WEST INDIA EMANCIPATION.

Sermon by Rev. Wm. T. Butler—General Grant Declared Responsible for Southern Outrages.

A special sermon, designed to commemorate emancipation in the West Indies, was delivered last evening at Zion Church, (colored,) corner of Bleecker and West Tenth streets, by the pastor, Rev. Wm. T. Butler. The large church was quite well filled, many of the auditors being whites of both sexes.

The reverend gentleman commenced with the well-known words of General Grant, "Let us have peace." After briefly alluding to the occasion which his sermon was designed to commemorate, he passed to the consideration of the present state of the country, and especially as respects the Republican Party in its relations to our Government. He claimed to be quite familiar with the condition of things at the South at the present time. He did not learn it, however, from the public Press, North or South. He was sorry to say that the papers did not give the condition of things as they existed. His information came from private sources, from numerous letters written to him by friends at the South, on whom he could rely implicitly. There is not, said the speaker, throughout all Tennessee, a Northern man, who is known to be such, who can be elected to any office, or trust or profit. The men of the South are as determined as ever to have things all their own way. He alluded to the prophecy that had been made by Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, while lying on his death bed and but a few days before his decease. Some personal and political friends called upon the old gentleman, when the latter inquired, "What is being done?" They could answer him nothing, and he then said that unless the great party which had brought the war to a successful termination carried out promptly and vigorously the measure of reconstruction without compromise of its principles, it would soon cease to be a power in the land. He believed that was a true prophecy. The glory of that great and once powerful Republican Party was already on the wane. Soon they would not be able to carry a single State throughout all the South. He said he spoke whereof he knew when he said that the same old spirit which for so many years prior to the war controlled this country, both North and South, still lingered there; nay, more, it was rankling. They were as determined as ever to control the South and the North as well. A great fight was coming, but it would not be a fight on the battle-field with rifles, bayonets and cannons. The South was defeated that thoroughly and failed most ignominiously. The fight was to be renewed in that field where they had always excelled; in that field where they had always outgeneraled the North; that field where for half a century and more they had proved more than a match for men of the field of politics. They have said to their rank and file, Yankees and others, that might be named, "Fall back." They have said to their bushwhackers, "Fall back. The North must be controlled by us as well as the South. We want some but conservative men to guide the ship of State now." At the beginning of the war did not the colored men tell the North they did not understand the purpose, the metal or the spirit of the South; when the officials at Washington proposed to put down the rebellion in thirty days, did not the black man laugh at them? Aye, the colored man knew the South much better than the white man of the North. The colored men knew the Southerners to be stubborn, chivalrous, proud. There would be a much battle yet. The politicians and leaders at the South are determined to take possession of this Government. They, the colored men, had hoped something from Andrew Johnson, but they had hoped in vain. Then came the new President, Grant. Upon him they had hoped much. They had waited patiently, but there for the last time, and waited in vain. General Grant, he believed, was trying an experiment which might prove fatal both to himself and to the party which elected him. He was not only too conservative, but he was weak. Mr. Walker had lately been elected Governor in Virginia by the Conservative Party, which is the party supporting Grant's Administration. That party, throughout the South, is not the friend, but the sworn enemy of the colored man. He would incorporate one law which had been enacted by the party which elected Mr. Walker in Virginia—the Negro Vagrant act, so called. That law was so odious that the military authorities throughout the State had suppressed it. But withdraw the military power from the State, and the next day that act would be enforced. The speaker was very severe upon the Grant and Walker Party in Virginia. He believed the disintegration of the Republican Party had already commenced. True it was that party that brought the war to a successful termination. It was a party which God in his wisdom seemed to have raised up for a particular purpose; its mission having been accomplished, and it having become so corrupt by reason of repeated successes, it was now about to fall to pieces. Before the next President election there would be a new party would be formed out of the fragments of others. In conclusion the speaker alluded to the anarchy which at present prevails throughout the South. Murders are very frequent—he had the means of knowing that in one State alone twenty-one horrible murders had been committed within six weeks, and these mostly in consequence of political hatred and revenge. The people of the North did not understand the real condition of things. One word from President Grant would stop all these outrages—one proclamation from him, and some one order might be restored there. But General Grant, he thought, was the weakest President this country had ever had. The inevitable result of his weakness would be his own political ruin and the downfall of the Republican Party.

SKEPTICISM VANQUISHED.

Faith in the Gospel Without Argument.

Rev. Lyman Abbott preached to a large congregation in the First Presbyterian Church, South Fourth-street, Williamsburg, yesterday forenoon, his subject being "The skepticism of of Thomas vanquished, or Faith in Christ without argument." His text was:

"Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. Then saith Jesus to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God. Jesus saith to him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."—John, xx., 25, 27, 28, 29.

Thomas had been declared the sceptical disciple. He was a doubter. He did not believe in the resurrection. Like sceptics of our own time, he wanted to feel the material of Christ's resurrection. He would believe nothing that was not argued out to an incontrovertible demonstration. But one of the great sins of many Christians, that they thought they should be able to present arguments in support of the faith that was in them, while it was a weakness on the part of others to argue. Christ, the Apostles, never did all the things they thought they should, therefore, they could not argue about it. The proof of the Christian religion was not to be found in the Christian, but in them; the love of mankind was the great argument of a loving humanity, could not be argued into an admirable thing to one who could hear no greater and discover no excellence in music; and so it was with those who believed in Jesus as their Saviour; they could not by means of argument merely lead others to love Him. Faith must first be implanted in the soul, and then we know merely that our trust was in him, and no one could by the most potent arguments lead us to abandon that faith. We know that we love Jesus. What could argue away such knowledge? What could annihilate that faith? The revelations made to men's souls were not purchased by arguments in favor of the atonement, the divinity of Christ, the resurrection, and other standards of the Church. Truth was precious to the soul because it was known, not because it was provable. The preacher exhorted his congregation not to wait for the arguments and deductions of science before they accepted the truth of Christ, but to take Him as He is—believe in Him, and trust in Him for what he has done for us.

EQUALITY IN HEAVEN.

A Secular Sermon on the Next World.

From the London Spectator.

Very few, indeed, of the notions about "Heaven"—using that word as the popular synonyme for the future life, and not as the alternative to Hell—will bear the most ordinary or momentary investigation. As a rule those notions are the merest condensations of widely-diffused hopes, which hopes, again, are often the product of certain disgusts at circumstances which in this world cannot be removed. The notion, for example, that Heaven is perpetual peace, a place where "congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths ne'er shall end," a long or eternal rest, is the result of the weariness which all good men must feel of their never-ending struggle with the world, the flesh and the devil, a hope no more in accordance either with reason or revelation than Hawthorne's, that he might be permitted a good long sleep of about two thousand years as a dress before he was set to work again. If the word Heaven has any meaning, it means a state of existence in which we shall do the Lord's work more perfectly than at present, in which we shall struggle more ardently against sin, and probably be tempted more strongly, but shall be subject to the rider that misery may be made a discipline, and certainly against ignorance of Him, all of which duties involve work, willing work or happy work, but still work, and not rest, which, again, is absolutely incompatible with the conception of Heaven. It requires but still finite soul to know Him, infinite. The struggle up a mountain may be the happiest effort of our existence, but except by a perversion of words it cannot be called rest. Nor are we able to perceive that as rest or at work the conditions of our soul can be one of absolute and complete happiness. A poet, he only can be perfectly happy whose knowledge and whose power are synonymous, synchronous and contemporaneous, because otherwise he must either make mistakes, or wait—or be disappointed. But this cannot possibly be true of any finite being, and with regard to the especial finite being called man there can be no solution of continuity, otherwise he is not an immortal being, or a being capable of a future life, but only a being who, like a wheat grain, is capable of reproduction in a different shape. Happiness, or happiness may be, for us so increased that, in comparison it may be called perfect, but absolutely perfect in any arithmetical sense it cannot be. If there is no solution of continuity, there must be memory, and with memory, regret, and with regret, shame, and with shame, suffering, however modified in degree by a clearer perception of the infinite purpose which, though regulating all things, has yet, as one great action in pursuit of that purpose, left human will in freedom. Again, there is the notion, most magnificent and productive of all the improved ideas, perhaps prompted by the desire of all hopes proved or unproved, that we shall in Heaven "know God." How should we know God? That we shall know Him better may be conceded easily, for an inborn conviction tells us, even without revelation, that the flesh acts as a veil between man and Maker, just as it acts, to use an unworthy simile, as a veil between the mind and absolute mathematical truth; and that we shall know Him much better follows from the certainty that half the obscuring influences will have in another world no place, that, for example, the sensuality among avarice could not continue even in hell—it cannot be continued on the earth; but, nevertheless, the eternal truth will remain that he is infinite, we infinite, that the finite, however near its comparative approximation, is still infinitely distant from the infinite, that, though to use Paul's glorious simile, we "see in a glass darkly" and "know in part," "glass" was a sort of semi-translucent alag, not our artificial crystal—and shall there see face to face, yet when we see even a human being face to face we do not, therefore, know its owner, and the attempt to know, always fail to know more than a fraction of him.

Of all the popular ideas of the future state, however, perhaps the most popular and the most erroneous is that expressed in the common saying, "We shall all be equal there." That saying is as old as Christianity; it appears in the Epistles to believers that "there is neither" words to bear so wide an interpretation; and it has for ages been one of the few grand consolations of the poor, the oppressed and the suffering. We are not sure whether it has not exercised a great an influence as any of the incidental ideas of Christianity; it has, at least, not, for example, greatly contributed to mould the organization of all Churches, the Roman Catholic Church more especially, and to form the ideal of all social reformers outside as well as within the pale of belief. There is something in it which suits human nature—the instinctive sense, even man occasionally entertains of his own nothingness before the Almighty—and also, perhaps—one must speak frankly to speak truthfully—the instinctive wickedness, or rather feebleness, of human nature, its incapacity of freeing itself from the tyranny of envy, self-consciousness, pride, the wish that the world may reverse in some visible manner the unjust judgment of this. The contrast between the real and the apparent, the relation of a man to men and his relation to the Omniscient, has struck all religious minds, and, we do not, therefore, wonder at the universal distinction between, a subject for intellectual speculation—but how far free of that portion of the effect of these passions which dwarfs or enlarges, or, it may be, expands and elevates the soul! Avarice, for instance, is, if we agree with Bentham, of all strong passions the one most directly earthly—having in it less of concrete than lust, the most carnal of all—and avarice can hardly continue in the next world; yet how can the effect of avarice, if it has modified the mind and soul, be lost, if there is no solution of continuity? Or being cast the effect of a noble impulse, say that of self-sacrifice for the cause of God, be wholly taken away? If it is taken away, what use in virtue or in strife? And yet? it is meta. where is the equality? Many, perhaps most of our readers, however, would acknowledge equal inequalities in Heaven, and a large section of them would rejoice in them, but in what way do they propose to get rid of inequality of intellect and knowledge? The intellect must continue if continuity continues, and with intellect its inequalities, or Heaven becoming suddenly the reverse of Newton Honors, the freed soul ceases to be that either of Homer or Newton. The smallest differences of culture, of knowledge of those intellectual circumstances which exercise impulse, must have their effect, however small, and their effect much in the direction they had in this world, or otherwise the continuousness of the sense of moral responsibility, that is, of the fact of moral responsibility—for the sense is the fact, or an idiot would be responsible—would, any time, be weakened. No doubt, these differences would, under the new light, seem very small as to be almost imperceptible—though light, by the way, reveals rather than covers differences—and no doubt, also, the differences there and the differences here would be judged by widely different laws, but still they would exist. To take the most visible, and, perhaps, the most important of all superficial distinctions among men, that which we call refinement, is that to be abrogated? Nine-tenths it is probably would be, as either artificial, or hypocritical, or the result of physical tenderness; but that other tenth, which comes in this world to affect even the coarse, and which certainly affects the moral nature, if only in the first generation, is that to disappear? How can it disappear without an erasure of the past, fatal are made to the very idea of continuous responsibility? Intellectual, it may be; but still the intellectual is not the non-existent, and for so much there is in the earthly sense a change in Heaven a little step in the road toward the ideal by which John starts in advance of Thomas. Then there is the hunger to advance, to inquire, to accumulate new knowledge, is that to go? It is possible, indeed easy, to conceive of a Wesleyan who is a Christian up to the spiritual level of any English man, yet lacks the humor entirely; is he the equal at first in Heaven of the man who, having all he has, has the humor, and having it, diverts its direction—as he would in the new light divert its direction—into a pursuit of the ens object of humor, clearer relation in all respects to the Divine? And if not the equal at first, why is he to be the equal at any time? Why is he, to speak in non-theological terms, to catch up the competition so eager at Hillsdale, but less weighted? Let us take the extreme case of a fool that, after all, though not the only way of arguing great theologians, is the only way of making such an assertion intelligible. The Fool, we assume that in the next world he meets the shade of Hartlewood and Sir Isaac and Melancthon, start fair. Why? Is he equal in intellect? Surely, if they do not make, such a miracle has been wrought on one or other of them that there has been a virtual new creation as of a new being, disconnected either with the idiot or Sir Isaac. Take any view of idiotcy you please, that, for instance, it is the result of mere bodily malformation ending instantly with death—quite the most probable view—and still the loss of the life's experience of volition must, if life be continuous at all, and soul and mind related, have been a loss to the soul, leaving it behind as a child's might be left behind in the great race. The ground may be caught up quickly; but surely it is not caught up through the intervention of miracle, else why not similar miracles as to moral status, but through some process of spiritual education and slow enlightenment. The possibility of education must exist in Heaven, and the possibility of education involves or assistate inequality. Earthly pupils may be reversed; of course, in many cases, must be reversed.—one could not conceive, for example, of the royal caste occupying anything but a very low position in the new life,—but grades there must still be. The theory of equality is nothing but an effort to express the inexpressible—the distance which must exist between the highest creature and the Creator, a distance so great that all other distances beside it seem as the inequalities in one sand. Still, no two grains of sand are of the same size.

Funeral of Henry Keep.

The funeral of the late Henry Keep took place yesterday afternoon from his residence, No. 68 Fifth-avenue. At the close of the ceremonies his remains were taken to the Hudson River depot, to be carried, for burial, to the Brookside Cemetery, at Watertown, Jefferson County.

At the meeting of the New-York Stock Exchange Board, Messrs. S. V. White, Rufus Hatch and E. S. Munroe were appointed to draft suitable resolutions, which they subsequently presented on Saturday at a special meeting in the Long Room, as follows:

Whereas, The New-York Stock Exchange has learned with profound sorrow of the decease of Henry Keep, one of its members, and are desirous of expressing their sense of the deep loss which they, in common with the whole community, have sustained by his death; it is hereby

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Keep the public industries of America have lost one of the most enterprising men of this age—one who, by a far-reaching view of the financial resources of this nation had done as much as any other to develop the immense wealth and to foster the internal improvements of our whole country.

Resolved, That while this Board mourn him as a companion and friend, who, by his integrity and uprightness in dealing, had endeared himself to the business world in a most remarkable degree, they recognize the loss to the family of the deceased, of a companion and protector, have suffered affliction which any words or sympathy are inadequate to portray, and that we can but express our appreciation of Mr. Keep's public services and private worth.

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to cause these resolutions to be entered upon the records of the Board and a copy, suitably engrossed, to be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and to furnish a copy of the same to the public Press.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Extensive Series of Larcenies—Arrest of the Thief and Receiver.

Messrs. Cashart, Ellis & Clark, cloth manufacturers at Nos. 64 and 66 Lispenard-street, have for some time been missing quantities of goods from their premises, as they notified Captain Petty, of the Fifth Precinct, who proceeded to investigate the matter. He soon became suspicious of the movements of one of the clerks, named Jacob J. Willis. A watch was set upon him, the result being his detection on Friday in leaving the store with a bundle of goods. Willis was seen to proceed to the premises No. 38 Oliver-street, occupied by Bernard Cohn, where he left the parcel. When Willis turned to leave the place he was arrested, and immediately made a full confession of his guilt in stealing large quantities of goods, ever since his employment by the victimized firm. These repeated thefts have been in progress ever since the beginning of January last, and Willis stated that he had in every instance delivered the goods to Mr. Cohn, at about one-half its real value, the fact that it was stolen property being well known by the purchaser, he having frequently urged Willis to be more frequent in his larcenies, and threatened him with exposure if he spoke of discontinuing the thefts.

The premises occupied by Cohn were subsequently visited by Detectives Field and Stevens, when they recovered nearly $2,000 worth of property stolen by Willis from his employers, among the plunder being the identical package taken by Willis on Friday, which led to his arrest. All of the property, when produced by the Police was fully identified by the owners. Both Willis and Cohn were arraigned before Alderman Moore, at the Tombs Police Court, yesterday, when they were fully committed for trial to answer the charges of larceny and receiving stolen goods. Willis is 21 years of age, and resides at Hudson City. Cohn is a native of Poland, aged 27, and professed to have purchased the stolen property in good faith.

The Police state that they have very good reason to believe that Willis endeavored to conceal the source of the reputed inheritance, by the commission of a sham burglary some time in the early part of last month, when he concealed himself in the store, and departed during the night through a rear window, which he left open. A few footsteps were unnoticed the Police were not deceived, and this attempt, in fact, led to the detection and arrest of Willis.

French Nautical Festival.

Yesterday afternoon our French fellow-citizens gave what they called a nautical festival, at Williamsbridge, on the Bronx River. About 300 persons, French and Germans, including a sprinkling of New-York roughs, were present. The roughs, finding that nothing was likely to be gained by creating a disturbance, left early. The festival commenced with a boat-race between Mr. Bieringer and Mr. Nelsen; but the boats being clumsy affairs, and the boatmen not very expert, the race excited very little attention. Next came a donkey race between M. Bernard and M. Prout, the former being made up as a bear and the latter as a monkey. The bear, with the usual clumsiness of his race, commenced proceedings by an impromptu tumble into the river. This feature, though not on the programme, was highly appreciated by the spectators. The bear, however, could not be induced to repeat it. The contest then came off, but the poor bear's spirits, as well as his body, had been so dampened by his mishap that he made a very poor show, and the monkey won with ease. Then followed a foot-race on a tight rope stretched about sixty feet above the Bronx River. The feat of crossing this rope was performed by Alexander Ranfretta, who afterward set on the rope and hung to it by his teeth, his nose and the back of his head. A boat-race between two very small boys, Armoyer and Theodore—who rowed extremely well—was next on the programme, and was one of the best performances of the day. Other races and tilting matches followed, the intervals being filled up with dancing, without which latter amusement no French festival can be considered complete.

A Sailor Robbed of his Earnings by a Woman.

Lizzie Roberts, a disreputable woman, was arraigned yesterday before Alderman Moore, at the Tombs Court, to answer a charge of larceny. It appears that the prisoner met Charles Carroll, a sailor, on Saturday night, and induced him to accompany her home. Carroll fell asleep there, and on his awaking discovered that he had been robbed of down in money and national bank notes, and $60 in gold coin. As Lizzie had disappeared, she was looked for and arrested. She stated that both Carroll and herself were intoxicated at the time, and that Carroll gave her the money for safe keeping, and that when Carroll fell asleep she visited a saloon in Spring-street, known as the "Hong Quo," where she believes the money was stolen from her. The Magistrate committed the prisoner for trial, and remanded the complainant to the House of Detention for witnesses.

A Hotel Thief Arrested.

On Saturday afternoon a man giving the name of George H. Newman entered the Metropolitan Hotel and engaged a room, being assigned to No. 445. During the day room No. 444, occupied by Commander S. D. Ames, U. S. N., was entered with false keys and robbed of $200 worth of wearing apparel. Detectives Fontan and McKenzie arrested Newman on suspicion and found on his person a baggage check which he said he received at the Boston Jubilee. The check was exhibited at several hotels, and finally claimed at the St. Nicholas, where the officers found Newman's trunk, and subsequently found it to contain a portion of the plunder. Newman, finding denial useless, admitted his guilt, and is now in custody awaiting examination.

Fires Yesterday.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the fourth floor of Joseph Schieren & Co.'s tobacco factory, No. 75 Bowery. The flames derived their origin from the heater, though they were speedily extinguished. The loss sustained by the firm by fire and water, is roughly estimated at $6,000, fully covered, however, by insurance. The building, owner unknown, is damaged to the extent of $600.

About 1 A. M. another fire occurred in the first floor of the premises, No. 66 Five-avenue, formerly known as the Old House of Refuge, but at present occupied by S. Pitou, dyer of "jute," or imitation human hair. The flames originated in the drying-room, and occasioned a loss on stock of fully $2,000. The premises are owned by John W. Sterling.

Suspected and Deadly Use of a Knife in the Fifth Ward.

About 7 o'clock yesterday morning John Sullivan, of No. 37 Jay-street, and Thos. Foreman, of No. 211 West-street, passed through Washington-street, and as they neared Hendricks-street Mr. Foreman was suddenly attacked by an assailant, who stabbed him in the groin with a knife, inflicting a severed and dangerous wound. The assailant succeeded in making good his escape before the arrival of the Police, who removed Foreman to their Station-house in Leonard-street, where he was attended by Surgeon Hendry, who subsequently ordered him to be removed to the New-York Hospital. The motive for the assault is not known, as Mr. Foreman and Mr. Sullivan both declare that there was no quarrel between them or any other person, and the affair was of so sudden and brief a nature that the assailant escaped. The wound, however, takes on an unknown character, which will, however, make an endeavor to assist him.

Wanton Railroad Accident.

A man named Edward Lawrence, a French Canadian, was killed, on Saturday morning, on the Hudson River Railroad, near Fort Washington, by being run over by an express train. The deceased, it appears, attempted to cross the track, and, while looking one way to avoid a train, was run over by another. The unfortunate man was horribly mangled and instantly killed. Coroner Keenan was duly notified, and ordered the removal of the remains to the Morgue, where an Inquest will be held today.

Desperate Fight in a Liquor Saloon.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a row occurred in the liquor saloon of James English, at No. 503 Canal-street, when Thomas Gallery was beaten about the head with the butt of a revolver by the saloon proprietor. The wounds were dressed by Dr. Kershner, when Gallery was detained to make a complaint against English, who was arrested.

The injuries are of a very serious nature, and McBarron was sent to Bellevue.

Shooting Affray in Pearl-street.

About $30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, as Maurice O'Brine, of No. 37 Frankfort-street, was standing in front of No. 260 Pearl-street, he was suddenly assaulted by John McCabe, of No. 3 Vandewater-street, who had a pistol, and shot Maurice through the right arm, succeeding in making his escape. The wound was not a dangerous one.

A Sleeping Man Falls off a Roof.

He fell a distance of over 20 feet, and struck with great violence on the roof of an adjoining building, sustaining severe internal injuries. Sent to Bellevue by order of the surgeon.

Swiss Coming to Virginia.—The Austrian agent of Mr. Emil Mahel von Alpenburg, who has founded an Austrian colony below Richmond, writes him that a Swiss gentleman wants to settle in the mountain region of Virginia some 300 Swiss families, now ready to emigrate. The letters of the Austrian colonists, near Richmond, in which they speak in the highest terms of the lands, climate, productions, &c., of Virginia, have been published in Austrian journals, and attracted the attention of the Swiss gentleman referred to. It is to be hoped he will be induced to bring his thrifty colony to our State.—Richmond Whig, July 29.
